kicker and punter, Willis couldn't win a state title. Too many selfish players. Too much talent. Eight or nine guys wanted to play hero. Nobody got the chance.

When Bishop left for Blinn Community College in Texas, he told his Willis High School coach, David Sine, he wanted to win two national championships.

He finished that two-year stint with a 24-0 record and two national titles.

When Bishop arrived at K-State three months before the start of the 1997 season with nothing but a genuine smile and a 500-page K-State playbook, he said he wanted to win a national championship at K-State.

He continues to discuss with Sine how he'll make that dream come true.

This is what I know about Michael Bishop: He can throw a football 93 yards. He wore burnt orange on campus the Monday after K-State whipped Texas. Once, I saw him tossing a small, plastic football with a five year-old by the softball fields at Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

He laughed and giggled more than the child.

Here's what I know about Michael Bishop: There's no room in Bishop's dream for a Heisman Trophy. Oh, he thinks about it, don't get me wrong, and his mother, Ethel, would make room for it in her home.

He also thinks about his teammates. Another Fiesta Bowl Offensive MVP trophy would fit quite nicely, too.

Bishop could have sent cute bishop chess pieces to all the Heisman Trophy voters that they could have discarded with the pile of leaves former Washington State quarterback Ryan Leaf sent at the same time a year ago.

He didn't.

A lowly bishop, he figured, isn't going to win anything without pawns, rooks, a queen and a king — a team.

He'll tell you he's a team player, probably more than anyone else on the team.

He'll tell you about K-State's greatest asset, team chemistry, and how his greatest fear is being considered an outsider because of the Heisman race.

"The only way I have a chance is if I play for my team," Bishop said. "My team needs that from me."

The force of Bishop's tirade following his first loss in three football seasons — a 56-26 defeat to Nebraska last season — left his teammates stunned in their locker room following the game when a raging natural-born leader blossomed before their eyes.

Bishop questioned their heart. He thought K-State could still win the game with five minutes to play. He was convinced of it. Never again, he vowed, never, ever would that happen again.

You believe him, right? You must. He's the guy who doesn't give up. He might be the most intense college football player you'll ever watch. But keep it your secret. Don't tell the nation quite yet.

Let K-State continue to sneak up on No. 1, like Bishop wants.

While some Wildcats talked about hanging out and watching football games during their off-weekend, Bishop talked only about Colorado, his next chance to help his team shine.

Bishop has spoken softly about the polls, been on several TV and radio shows, spent a few minutes on ESPN's SportsZone politely answering questions about the Heisman Trophy race and the Nebraska game, which some people are convinced is the only game K-State plays this season.

He's through talking about it now, so stop asking him the questions. When you spot him in public, smile, and let perhaps the greatest quarterback in school history continue to do what he does best.

Win.

that house and others.

However, due to increasing Rush numbers, Babcock said the reinstatement would be positive for the greek system.

"We really want to expand the opportunity to broaden everyone's experiences," Babcock said. "It starts to get really hard to connect with 52 people."

Robel said it would have been fine if the Panhellenic Council had chosen not to add another sorority. However, she said each chapter would have to accommodate more pledges each year, which can cause a lot of problems.

Schwermann said Kappa Delta will want to start its colonization as early as fall 1999. She said there will be an advance-promotion program at the onset, then a colonization team will be formed to work with the pledges and eventually the pre-chapter. Schwermann said it plans to pledge 100-150 members during its first year.

"We rushed 200 and pledged 130, and we rock 'n' rolled," Schwermann said.

Kappa Delta has two chapters in Kansas and 120 chapters throughout the nation.

The sorority will reopen its house at 1220 Centennial Drive in fall 2000. Lisa Drum, former national officer, said it will take a semester to get things ready for the pre-chapter to move in.

Martha Kellstrom, former Kappa Delta national council member, said there is an alumni association in Manhattan that will assist with the alumnae advisory board. She said she knows they will want to get involved and help out as much as they can.

The alumnae advisory board will attend Kappa Delta's weekly chapter meetings and meet monthly with the chapter council.

Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbecue and Franz, White and Zanella liquor store each received one citation. Their managements can choose to attend alcohol-enforcement training to bypass a penalty for the violation.

ABC spokeswoman Sheila Walker said this round of violations is the first in Manhattan since new, stronger penalties for liquor license violations went into effect July 1. She said the penalties and enforcement efforts across the state are helping bring licenseholders into compliance.

"It's already started to change behavior," Walker said. "When we started this fiscal year, the rate in which licensees were in compliance was only 65 percent. Since the new penalty structure went into effect, we've already seen an improvement to 80 percent.

"Whether or not that will hold, we have yet to see, but it is encouraging that we've already seen a 15-percent increase in the past 3 months," she said.

As part of the new penalties, licenseholders who receive nine citations in a four-year period will have their license revoked.

Bar owners are allowed to appeal the citations to ABC Director Bernie Norwood.

If they choose not to appeal, they must pay their fines within 15 days of receiving the citation and could face license suspension as early as Oct. 26.

KJ's owner Jeff Fellows said the ABC violations aren't a result of his recent decision to make KJ's an 18-to-enter bar. If anything, he said, he's received fewer violations since the change.

"On a day-to-day basis, my MIPs are way down," he said. "The RCPD probably checks my bar harder than any other bar in town. They come and check us every weekend, and I haven't had an MIP in four weeks."

Lucky BrewGrille managers did not return calls at press time.

Walker said ABC agents will continue to check the compliance of bars in Manhattan and in other college towns across the state. Seven Lawrence bars also received administrative citations; each received one.

getting an education to do that," Fiedler said. "Without this ongoing education, this world will be stagnant. I think anything of the magnitude of Fiedler Hall is certainly something to enhance that education."

Even with a full life behind her, Fiedler has the sort of optimism a college student possesses. This might explain how she has interacted so successfully with a variety of students she's encountered over the past few days: she spontaneously invited one student to a luncheon in her honor while numerous students have approached her to offer personal thanks. Her advice to students is simple.

"I'd tell them to take advantage of everything that is offered them — not only in one category," Fiedler said. "This world is changing all the time and we need to make it better. We can't just let it stay as it is presently. We have to go on and improve it."

being too partisan on the impeachment issue.

Clinton himself did not mention the proceedings unfolding 16 blocks away when he appeared briefly before reporters on the White House grounds.

Nixon resigned before the full House could vote to impeach him in August 1974. The only other president to face the threat of impeachment, Andrew Johnson, was impeached by the House but acquitted in the Senate by a single vote in 1868.

Inside the committee room, Schippers, the lifelong Democrat hired by Hyde to oversee the case for Republicans, methodically reviewed evidence submitted three weeks ago by Starr.

Dropping some of Starr's counts, adding others and recasting still others, he came up with 15 counts, four more than Starr had.

Plastic to replace Union china permanently

By AMANDA EWING
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Paper plates, Styrofoam cups and plastic utensils will continue to be used in the K-State Student Union, even after renovations are complete, Union Director Bernard Pitts said.

Pitts said the switch from normal china and silverware was warranted on several levels, one being sanitation.

"We started using paper products and plastic in the summer due to the inability to sanitize the utensils and china because of the ongoing structure and utilities renovations," Pitts said.

Asbestos removal in the utensil-maintenance area was one factor that led to the switch, as well as shutdowns in utilities that didn't allow proper water temperatures for cleaning the dishes.

Construction also will force the removal of one of the dishwashers so that more square footage can be added to the K-State Union Bookstore. A smaller dishwasher eventually will be installed to handle the china and silverware used for catering and in the Bluemont Room.

Pitts said that because this is the first year to use plastic utensils, he didn't know how much would be spent, but it would be less than the total cost of replacing and washing silverware.

Recent bids for silverware indicate the cost of replacing individual knives, forks and spoons will be $1.50 for each item. The cost of plastic utensils is $0.014 per item.

The amount of labor in the dish room also decreased due to the move to plastic, but no student workers lost jobs.

"We redistributed workers and put them into other departments," Paul Stolle, director of Union food services, said. "No jobs were lost."

The new Union Food Court, which will be completed in May 1999, also influenced the switch to paper and plastic. The restaurants that will be in the food court, including Burger King, Amigos and Manchu Wok, will provide their own wrappers, boxes and plates.

"When we decided to go to a food-court concept, we brought with it disposable eateries and paper," Pitts said. "Food courts and stand-alone food chains aren't expected to have china."

The trash of the restaurants will add to the amount of trash being thrown away each day. The use of paper, plastic and Styrofoam also increases the amount of waste generated each day. However, efforts already have been made to deal with the increased waste.

"We have invested in more compactors to allow us to handle more trash," Pitts said. "We are trying to minimize space in the landfills."

Pitts said there has been feedback on the increased use of paper and plastic and the waste it produces.

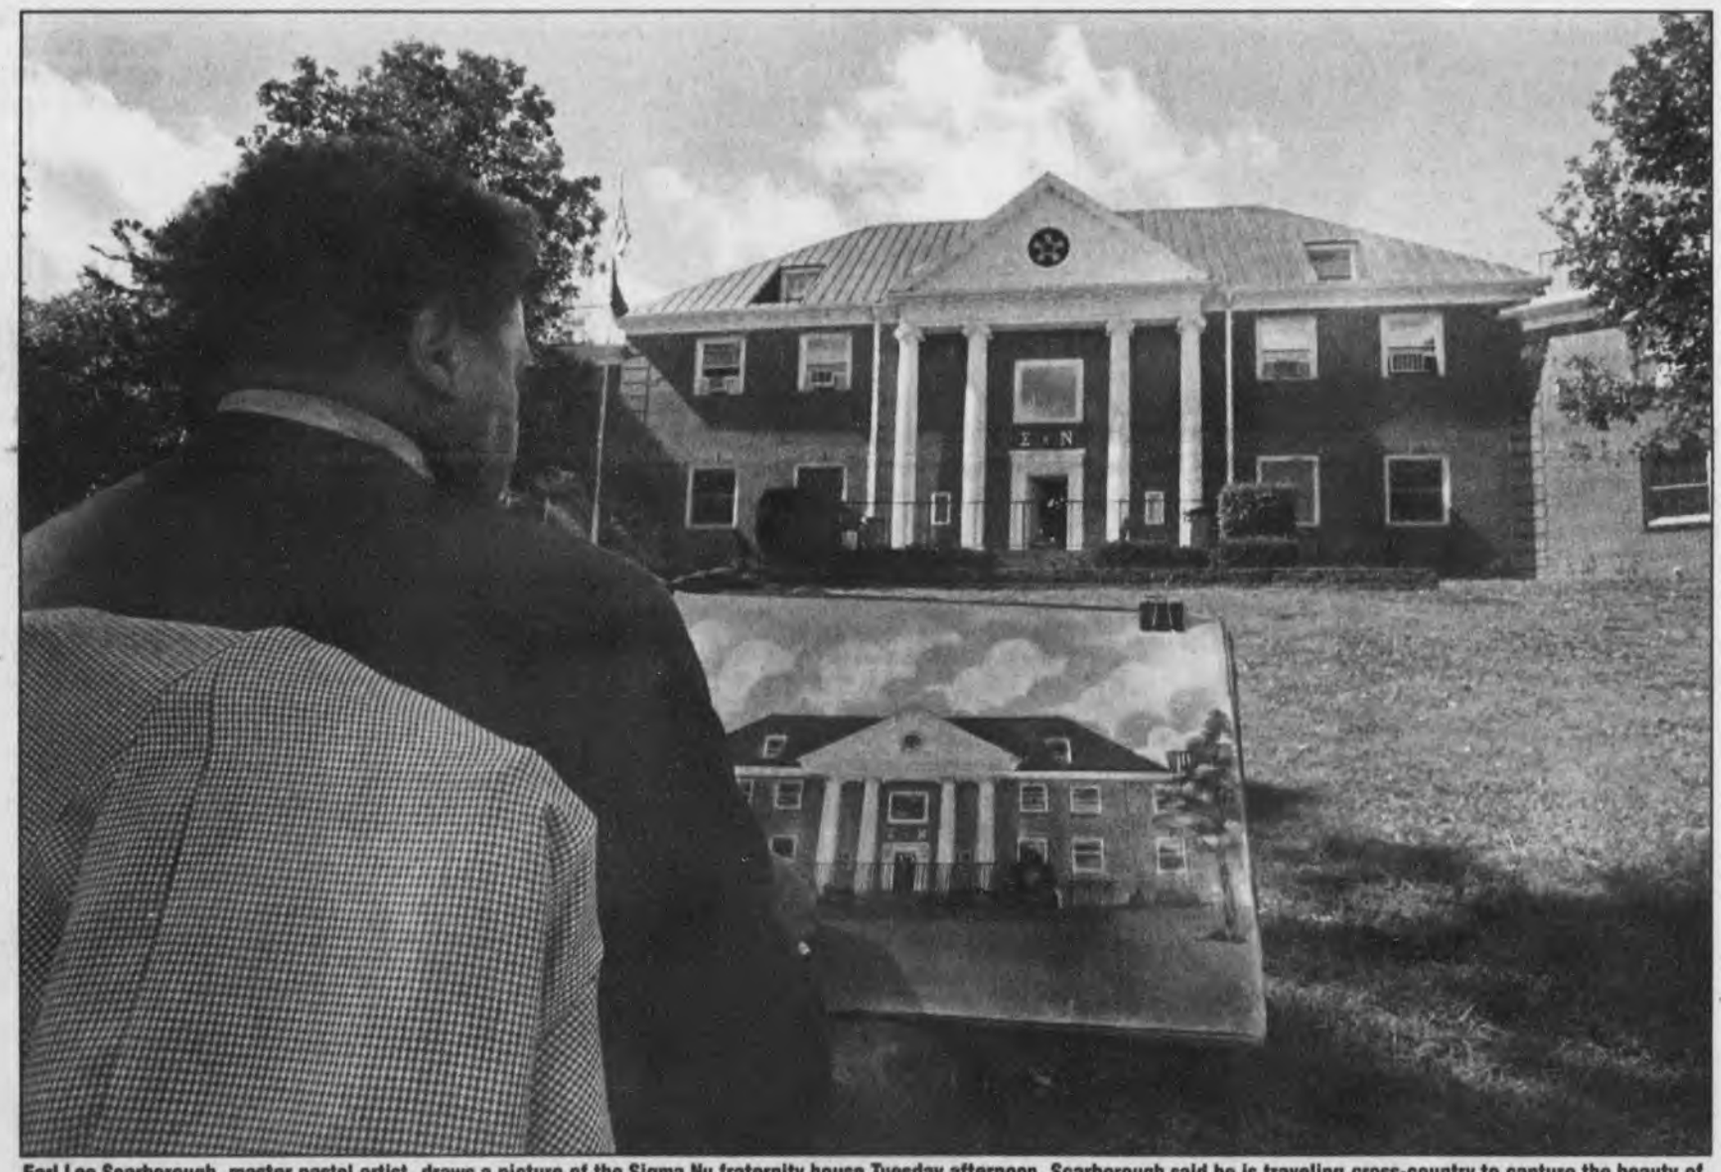
"There has been some concern from the environmental position that we're adding to recycling concerns," Pitts said. "The Union has always had a part in recycling programs. It's a misnomer that the Union is insensitive to this."

The Union recycles wooden pallets, grease, cardboard, newspapers and computer paper. Pitts said the Union discontinued recycling aluminum cans last year due to a lack of storage space and available facilities to take the cans.

Though many items in the Union are recycled, Pitts said there was no discussion about the feasibility of recycling the plastic utensils and paper plates. Pitts said the Styrofoam cups that are used do not contain chlorofluorocarbons, and many of the paper bags and wrappers are made from recycled materials.

Pitts said silverware, china and glassware will continue to be used for catering and in the Bluemont Room. There are also ongoing discussions about using china as part of the Kitchen Classics (a la carte) menu.

Mark Rogers, senior in elementary education, said he hopes the silverware would be reinstated for general use.



"I don't mind the plates, but I can't stand the plastic silverware," Rogers said.

"I'd like them to go back to silverware."

Pitts said the Union anticipated some complaints, but he doesn't feel it has created an unfavorable situation.

"It's a matter of the times and the direction we're going with food service," Pitts said. "We can explain the circumstances and hope people understand."

■ OUR OPINION
The Collegian editorial board says the Union should evaluate this decision after renovation is completed.

Earl Lee Scarborough, master pastel artist, draws a picture of the Sigma Nu fraternity house Tuesday afternoon. Scarborough said he is traveling cross-country to capture the beauty of historic buildings for an art appreciation and public relations tour.

BRIDGING HISTORY, ART

Traveling artist sketches Sigma Nu house

A NATIONALLY renowned artist is visiting Manhattan this week, leaving Sigma Nu fraternity members with more than just a sketch of their house.

"He told us he's on a special tour," Dan Suellentrop, junior in business, said. "He's been traveling around sketching historic buildings to help build art appreciation."

Sitting in an old wooden chair on the steep hill beneath Sigma Nu, Earl Scarborough, Oklahoma City resident and pastel artist, said he tries to capture more than just the dark brick and white pillars facing Sunset Avenue.

"My goal is bridging the gap with art as the means," he said. "When I was a child, there was a division people had just on the basis of complexion. Today, for those of us who can afford luxury, we forget about trying to affect change."

Scarborough is trying to do something about that.

"I've done my job when people can share mutual appreciation, when something is sustained and shared together," he said.

With this goal in mind, Scarborough said he sketches images he hopes will bring people together.

"Where you live. Where you dine. Where you bank. Day-in-life art," he said.

Scarborough said he isn't content to sit around in a studio. He said he prefers visiting cities with schools so students can meet and know an artist concerned about social awareness.

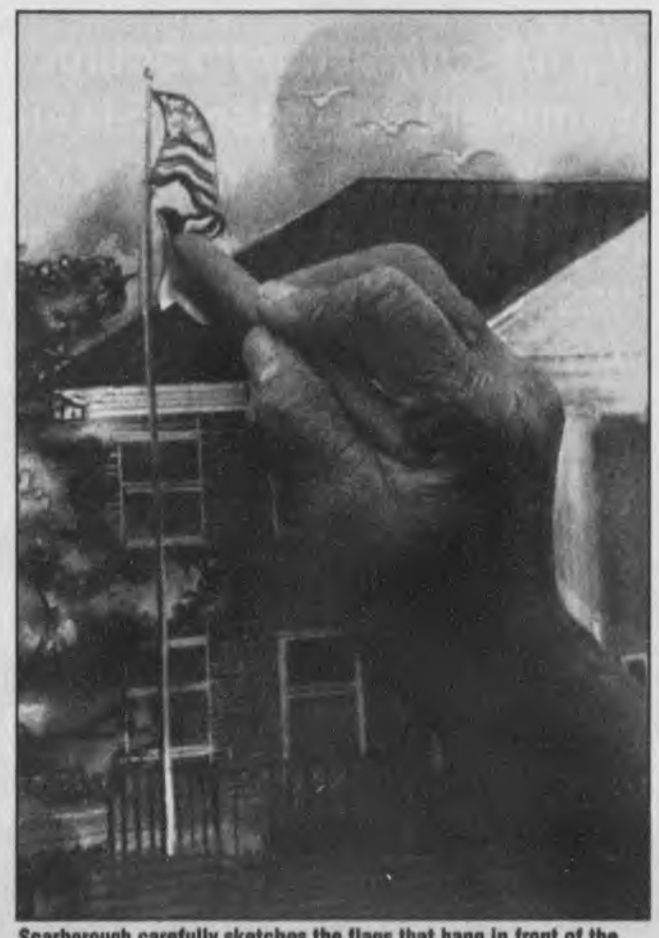
"I've succeeded with the students who seem to want to see an artist who is concerned with the past, present and future worth of a country," he said.

Greek houses are among his favorites.

"When you can meet people starting their lives, it means a lot to add chapters of worth," he said. "My biggest lift is when I autograph a painting 'thanks, Mom and Dad, for my home away from home.'"

Scarborough said he also inspires students in other ways.

"My work provides me from $150 to $1,000 a day," he said. "I think it helps students to know a man who makes $1,000 a day. It's not an ego trip, it's legal, creative and wholesome."



Scarborough has been sketching professionally for more than 30 years. In 1969, he created a society called Black Pride Arts Unlimited. He's received three honorary pins from fraternities, recognition from the NAACP and is about to get what he said he feels is one of his highest honors.

He will celebrate his 65th birthday this summer.

"I love every minute of every day of what I do," he said.

"Not just on campuses, but showing art. It is therapeutic, and it has kept me rich and famous — and I'm still living."

Impeachment inquiry scope undetermined

By DAVID ESPO
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — With a House vote set for Thursday on launching an open-ended impeachment inquiry, Democrats rushed to counter Republican plans while still underscoring their disapproval of President Clinton's affair with Monica Lewinsky.

CLINTON

At the White House, spokesman Joe Lockhart accused the GOP leadership of using the impeachment issue "to embarrass the president" and produce political gain for Republicans at the polls this fall.

Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, said the issue would come to the floor for a vote on Thursday. Republican

Funds approved for sewer improvements

■ Residents want city to cover cost of entire project, not just 30 percent.

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The city of Manhattan took steps to improve city infrastructure and services at Tuesday night's City Commission meeting.

The commission approved city funds for sewer improvements in a residential neighborhood and approved the first reading of an ordinance allowing a limousine service to operate in Manhattan.

It voted to fund improvements in the recently annexed Sargent Addition. Under existing guidelines, the city would have paid only 4 percent of the cost of upcoming sanitary sewer and water improvements. The commission voted to pay 30 percent of the estimated $1,349,000.

The improvements concerned many residents who said the project was forced on them when the city

Police conclude deaths were murder-suicide

ABILENE, Kan. — Investigators have concluded that financial and domestic problems led a father to shoot his wife and three young daughters and then commit suicide.

That explanation is not a surprise, because Abilene police and the Kansas Bureau of Investigation have been investigating the deaths of the five family members as four murders and a suicide.

The Dickinson County coroner, Dr. Steven Schwarting, reached the same conclusion, basing it on preliminary autopsy results. His determination was made public Tuesday by Jim Davis, Abilene's public safety director.

The victims were Douglas L. Bowen, 28; his wife, Sandra L. "Sandy" Bowen, 25; and their daughters, Amanda, 6; Sierra, 4; and Victoria, 2. The wife and girls were found dead in the family's trailer home Wednesday night.

Bowen, the husband and father, was found critically wounded inside the trailer. He died Thursday at a Wichita hospital.

In a statement, Abilene police said they believed Bowen shot his wife and children with a shotgun then used a small-caliber handgun to shoot himself. Both guns were recovered from the trailer.

"Investigators have conducted extensive interviews with family, friends and co-workers," the police statement said. "These interviews have painted a picture of financial problems and domestic discord. These problems are believed to have led to the tragic events."

Final autopsy reports are not likely until next week, KBI Special Agent Scott Teeselink said .

"There were so many victims and so many autopsies," he said.

Records in Dickinson County District Court showed Sandra Bowen had sought a restraining order against Douglas Bowen in May 1993, alleging he had attempted to cause bodily harm to her and that she had filed for divorce in June 1994. Both times, the couple apparently reconciled, because the actions were dismissed at their request.

A neighbor in the trailer park said Sandra Bowen planned to leave her husband about a month ago. She left their home for about a week, then returned, the neighbor said.

The couple also filed for bankruptcy in federal court in Wichita last March, listing debts of $51,315 and assets of $3,926. The biggest debt was a $32,606 judgment rendered against the couple in Shawnee County District Court last December in favor of Stormont-Vail Regional Medical Center in Topeka.

KC area still reeling after Sunday's storm

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Rescue teams continued their search Tuesday for two victims -- possibly more — who were swept away during fierce flooding in one of the area's worst storms in more than 20 years.

Sunshine prevailed across the metropolitan area Tuesday as city officials began to access the damage from Sunday's storm. At least seven people were killed when more than 7 inches of rain fell in the area, flooding several roads and creeks.

City Manager Bob Collins estimated between $4 million and $5 million in storm damage. An official estimate was expected to be submitted at a special city council meeting Tuesday afternoon.

Meanwhile, Lt. Gov. Roger Wilson declared a state of emergency Tuesday because of statewide flash flooding.

Kansas City Mayor Emanuel Cleaver said he planned to seek federal funding to help in the local cleanup effort. He had declared a state of local emergency disaster early Monday.

Tuesday's search for victims focused on Brush Creek, where at least two more people were believed to have been swept off a bridge Sunday night, police spokesman Russ Dykstra said.

"Unfortunately, there might be more," Dykstra said. "Witnesses say several people, possibly kids, were in the car. We have the police and fire department walking along banks, looking in trees and in piles of rubbish that washed up from who knows where."

Three victims were recovered from the creek Monday. Two men were killed Sunday night when their cars were swept off roads in neighboring Kansas suburbs.

A 9-year-old boy drowned in a creek behind his home in Blue Springs, Mo., east of Kansas City, and a woman's body washed up in an area where several cars stalled in high water.

Cleaver planned to submit the request for funds to the Federal Emergency Management Agency at Tuesday's council meeting.

"We are certain now that we don't have the resources to handle this alone," he said.

Sunday's storm caused the area's worst flooding since a 1977 deluge that killed 25 people and caused $100 million in damage, city officials said.

Collins said federal assistance could include fixing infrastructure damage to bridges and roads, improving flood prevention and assisting businesses and homeowners with cleanup.

One of the more severely damaged buildings was at the American Royal complex just west of downtown. The buildings are used for large horse shows and rodeos each year. About 2 1/2 feet of water flooded several buildings in the complex, spokeswoman Colleen Hall said.

The American Royal Rodeo will take place in November despite earlier reports that it might be canceled due to flooding, Hall said. The annual event is an attraction that brings 30,000 people and about $2.5 million dollars in revenue to the city.

Cleaver did not have a timeline on when FEMA would make a decision on his request.

"It's all in the pen of the president," he said. "The president signs his name to a document, then FEMA is obligated to provide assistance."

Clinton says farm aid money not adequate

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Senate Republicans sent their $4.1 billion farm aid package to President Clinton on Tuesday despite his admonition "not to leave town" before adding more money.

Clinton and the Democrats have pushed a $7.3 billion plan that would rely mostly on giving farmers an extra $5 billion through a program that subsidizes growers when commodity prices fall below set levels.

The 55-43 Senate vote for the smaller package sets the stage for Clinton's certain presidential veto.

It also means the $60 billion overall agriculture spending bill, to which the relief package is attached, is on hold until lawmakers reach an agreement, which must come soon. GOP leaders have said they hope to complete all of their spending work by this weekend when Congress is scheduled to adjourn.

"Today, the Senate had one last chance to improve this bill," said Tom Amontree, spokesman for Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman. "We're disappointed they didn't do it."

Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., said if the president vetoes the bill, Republicans plan to try to attach it to an omnibus spending bill with other appropriations measures.

"The president is willing to put at risk those programs that are funded in this bill to accommodate the interests of a few," Sen. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., said during debate Tuesday.

"To veto the bill creates more delay, more uncertainty," said Cochran, who chairs the agriculture appropriations subcommittee. "Farmers need help now."

Other Republicans reiterated their fierce opposition to additional money with Sen. Paul Coverdell, R-Ga., urging Clinton to "withdraw his foolish veto threat."

Time to tap a vein

it could save someone's life

Marc Maddox, sophomore in secondary education and biology, looks up at an American Red Cross donor service technician Monday while donating blood in the basement of Putnam Hall. The American Red Cross blood drive will continue from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today through Friday in the K, S and U rooms of the K-State Student Union and Friday in Trotter Hall from 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

By TL Meyer
Kansas State Collegian

K-Staters can help save a life and help K-State reclaim the donor trophy from the University of Kansas by giving blood this week.

The five-day American Red Cross blood drive began Monday and runs through the end of the week in the K-State Student Union.

The contest between K-State and KU to increase the number of blood donors began in spring 1993. The school that donates more pints of blood receives a traveling trophy to keep until the next blood drive. Two drives take place every year, one in the fall and one in the spring.

K-State has lost the contest two out of 11 times, including a loss last spring by eight pints of blood.

Mark Barkman, student coordinator for the K-State Blood Drive and senior in international business and marketing, said the goal for the fall drive is to collect more than 800 units, or pints, of blood.

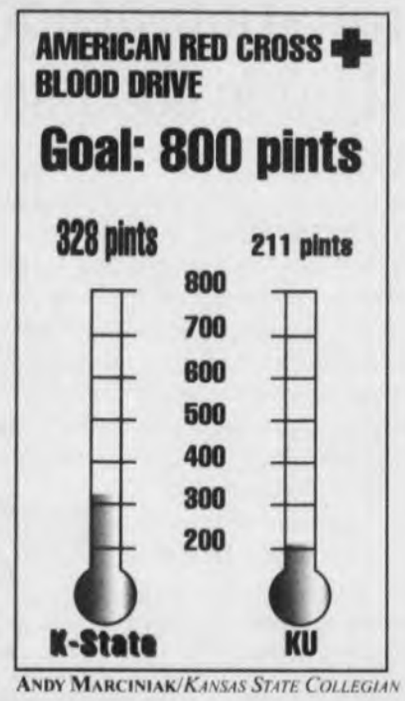
"The gift of blood is important because there is no synthetic product for it," Barkman said.

Donors also will be able to give blood at the Veterinary Medicine Complex on Friday. The drive will be set up in Trotter Hall from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

The blood drive's goal each year is to increase the number of donors continually, said Nancy Powell, Red Cross Donor Resource Consultant for North Central Kansas.

"The biggest motivation to give blood is that they want to help other people," Powell said.

Powell said the K-State/KU contest is a good way to increase awareness among students about the blood drive. The donor meter in front of the Union is a good motivator for the students, she said.



Barkman said they try to create awareness and campus involvement by getting clubs involved and including a wide range of volunteers, from the Kiwanis Club to individual student volunteers.

Parking Services is contributing, as well. Donors will receive coupons for $5 off an on-campus parking fine. Donors also will receive T-shirts that say, "Share the power — give blood," Barkman said.

Powell said students should set aside at least 90 minutes for the donation process. She suggested bringing a book or a friend.

Barkman said donors must weigh at least 110 pounds and be in good health the day they donate. They should eat usual foods and drink plenty of fluids. Most often, he said, people can't give because it is hard to find a vein when a potential donor is dehydrated.

Potential donors will be asked a series of questions to determine if they are eligible to give blood.

A row of numbered pint donation bags sits in preparation to be filled by donated blood. This year's American Red Cross blood drive goal is 800 units, or pints, of blood.

Evaluation needed for Union food service

The powers that be at the K-State Student Union have decided to stick with paper and plastic plates and utensils after renovations are complete.

The Union Stateroom switched to disposable utensils this summer due to structure and space concerns with all the construction. Utility shutdowns that didn't allow for proper sanitation and asbestos removal in the utensil maintenance area were the main reasons for the temporary switch.

Nobody wants an order of asbestos on the side, so you can't blame officials for making the seemingly costly, environmentally unfriendly change.

But we urge Union officials to weigh their options at the end of the renovation period, when they have hard numbers to examine and Union life gets back to normal.

There's really no choice at this point, but there are some things to be considered.

What's the cost of plasticware vs. china and silverware? Replacing stolen forks at $1.50 a pop is pretty steep when a case of plasticware can be purchased for $14. But how much more trash will be funneled out of the Union each day?

They've invested in more compactors to help curb the amount of trash, but compacted trash does find its way to the landfill.

Is it feasible to recycle the paper products? Union director Bernard Pitts said the materials are manufactured from recycled material, and are recyclable themselves, but he never said they have plans to recycle.

Don't rule this one out early.

The environmental cost of thousands of plastic plates and utensils used daily seems pretty significant. We urge Union officials to consider recycling once the Union gets back to a regular routine. In the midst of construction and renovations, recycling might not be possible.

Maybe the labor and water needed to clean the china makes the plasticware economically viable. Let's make sure, either way.

We applaud Pitts and his staff for finding ways to retain those employees whose jobs might have been lost when the need for dishwashers disappeared.

Students should use the comment boxes in the Stateroom to let Union officials know how they feel about this issue. If you've been stealing silverware, drop them an apology and tell them you won't do it again. If you think cutting some Union food with a plastic knife sounds like more trouble than it's worth, let them know.

So many times students don't express their opinions on campus issues until policy changes have been made. The renovation period is temporary. If you hate the plastic, tell 'em. If you think plastic is great, tell 'em that, too.

Union officials should look at the renovation period as a testing ground for permanent use decisions. It provides obvious points to stop and investigate options.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Driving down Ward Parkway on the other side of State Line in Kansas City, Mo., is perhaps the closest a Kansan can come to genteel urbanity.

Cruising down Shawnee Mission Parkway (the Kansas side) is an enchanting experience — not because the large boulevard is lined with historic mansions, but because it is a slice of well-manicured lawns and lush gardens, fountains and sculptures along a major thoroughfare in the city. It's Kansas City emulating Paris or even Washington, D.C., and it's hard to believe the parkway works as a decent route to cross the Johnson County suburbs.

The design and maintenance of these streets is an example the rest of that city, and for that matter Kansas, could do well to follow.

Instead, we have been, and continue to be, dealt a hand of freeway construction that seems odd in an age of environmental awareness, recurring notions of stopping city sprawl, and increased aesthetic consciousness. Almost playing to our own false reputation as a cultural and intellectual backwater, Kansas is as much attuned with contemporary thinking in public transportation as iwa 1950 Los Angeles.

In Manhattan, we have managed to develop that strange hybrid of road that can't decide if it's a freeway or a country highway. Just what is Seth Childs Road? Or Fort Riley Boulevard? Perhaps no one outside of our sadistic city engineer's office can wager a guess. And, yet, Manhattan's attempts at freeway construction are relatively trite when compared with the wholesale city destruction taking shape in Wichita.

What was once a grand cross-town axis, an orientating line of motion that pierced the heart of the city, Kellogg Avenue no longer exists in recognizable form. What was a four-lane boulevard through neighborhoods of stately homes and businesses that had become local institutions and what might have been the very essence of what it was to live in Wichita instead has been removed totally from the landscape and left only as a memory.

Drive to Wichita tomorrow and you can see the scar firsthand. The gaping earthen void where a below-grade freeway will ooze its concrete skin lies in between makeshift temporary roads that lead impatient commuters from downtown to the gleaming new suburbs rising in wheat fields on the eastern fringes of the city. It's a sight any contractor would salivate to witness.

Unbelievable amounts of natural resources, human labor and government money have accumulated to give Kansas citizens an east-west freeway in Wichita that simply never was needed. Instead of keeping Kellogg Avenue as the landscaped boulevard it was meant to be, city planners have sold Wichita short and authorized the destruction of countless landmark homes, an art deco fire station, and too many businesses to count.

And what will be left when the city planners have taken other jobs in other cities? When the politicians have moved on to other election schemes? When it's all said and done and the contractors have pocketed their money, what will exist on the two sides of this new freeway — this nameless expressway that never will evolve into anything else but its first iteration?

One doubts very much any sense of community possibly could survive this blitzkrieg undertaking.

But Wichita has a history of ignoring opportunity in community-building. When reporting on the opening of a new gateway sculpture to downtown Wichita a few years ago, I took the opportunity to talk with residents of the "neighborhood" in which this gateway was built.

To set up the picture, imagine a barren expanse of land crisscrossed with streets and covered over by a soaring elevated freeway (one segment of the former Kellogg Avenue that became freeway a few years back). On one side of the freeway are fast-food restaurants, gas stations and the central business district in the distance; the other side has only decrepit homes. On that night, a few residents roamed the area before the glitzy, firework-strewn affair for the gateway unveiling.

I asked them if they had been invited to participate in the planning or conceptual stages of their new gateway. No. But had they met the artist? No. Did they know why a gateway was being built? Of course not. The concern among the vast majority was why their neighborhood wasn't better serviced with city buses.

With such care given to the older historic parts of the city, is it any wonder why any Wichitan with money would ever want to invest in the city's center? It's what Lewis Mumford might call "prefabricated blight." The freeway is designed to split the city in two — to separate the poor neighborhood from the Chamber of Commerce-sponsored vision of downtown as characterized by the vacuous gateway sculpture.

Wichita's new freeway is a dreadful vision of community that is now being mass-produced on the broken backs of residents and the grave of a city that might have been.

Cyclists need to be recognized on campus and given respect

Editor,

It is becoming increasingly difficult to enjoy commuting to campus via cycling. A month ago I left class to find my bike, and others around it, being "watered" by campus sprinklers. I took time out of my day to call facilities management and convey this inconvenience.

There are more bicycles on campus today; probably more than ever. Since the semester's start, I spend more time finding an open spot on campuswide bike racks than I do commuting. A few times I've had to lock my bike to nearby trees or building rails.

Why bike? To save on gas expense, avoid polluting the air, increase fat metabolism, relax from life's stresses, save on expensive parking permits, and gain spiritual benefits — to name a few. So, why not bike? Because you can't always find an open bike rack slot, there are not enough dedicated bike lanes, and you might get a parking violation.

Parking violation? Yep, one morning a few weeks ago, I biked to my first Spanish exam, and lo and behold, there was no bike rack, just a polygon of blue flags marking where it used to be. So, I biked over to Hale Library and locked it up to an entrance rail and went in to study. Later, I took my exam and returned to the library rail to see the yellow parking violation requesting $15. If there was adequate rack space, and racks remaining where they usually reside, this would not have occurred.

Cyclists are here, and it's high time to take responsibility for them. We are a large part of this college community.

Over the years, automobile acquires personality

VIEWPOINT

JASON RUCKER

The bad news came as I was on my way out the door Monday morning. I knew it was coming but had hoped to delay it as much as possible. My '87 Ford Escort EXP had moved on to that great highway in the sky. With only 270,851 miles on it, my dreams of someday turning the odometer over to a cool million were dashed in their youth.

My car was dubbed "the Messiah-mobile" for its many resurrections. It has been brought back from the dead more times than Jason Voorhees (for you less-cultured types, that's the guy in the hockey mask from the "Friday the 13th" movies.)

When you've had a car for some time, it seems to develop a personality. I got my car in March of my junior year of high school and quickly learned that it had multiple-personality syndrome, and one of the personalities was suicidal.

The first attempt on its life came only months after I got the car. It was a rainy summer day, and a friend and I were driving 30 mph in my hometown when suddenly a sickly thud occurred. Immediately, everything in the car went off, and when I tried the key, there was no response. We got out and found an oil slick that rivaled the Exxon Valdez spill streaming down the street in the falling rain. I said, "I don't know much about cars, but I'm pretty sure that's not good."

The diagnosis was a thrown rod through the oil pan. The car had tried to shoot itself. Lucky for me, but not for my savings account, replacing the engine solved the problem. Thus, the Messiah mobile arose from the grave for the first time.

My freshman year of college, I had just returned from a trip to see my younger brother play in a football game. I got right next to my house, and screech! The car decided it had gone far enough. The brakes locked up, and I was dragging my rear tires in the same way a dog with worms drags its butt across the carpet.

I don't remember the specific diagnosis, but I do remember the brake system was gutted and replaced to the tune of nearly a grand. I likely got hosed on that one, but nonetheless, it was alive!

The next two were my fault, reckless endangerment. I went around a corner on ice too fast, and the car didn't bounce away from the curb as neatly as the ones at the fair do. The front passenger-side tire folded under like a Go-Bot, but instead of a toy soldier, I got a cracked frame. Then I did the honors of re-cracking the frame on a tight corner curb while leaving a fast-food drive-thru in haste to make it to a football game my junior year. Resurrection takes three and four.

Towing the tires from the grave the fifth time cost me my spring break money in February of my junior year when the in-tank fuel pump went out. Those things ain't cheap.

The most drastic suicide attempt occurred last March on the weekend of the big ice storm. I had been snowed in at my hometown and was on my way home Monday afternoon. I was cruising along 40 miles south of here, and the car lurched forward at an obscene angle. I thought I had blown the front passenger-side tire and got out to put on the spare.

I walked around the front of the car and began laughing hysterically. The entire wheel had flown off! Not just the tire, the whole wheel! A couple of the studs the lug nuts screw on to had snapped off. The wheel was nowhere in sight. Eventually, I found it in the ditch on the opposite side of the road.

I thought this was it, but my parents opted to fund the fifth and final rebirth.

In its last days, something had gotten into the brake system that was not brake fluid and caused all the rubber parts therein to swell up like a navy life raft.

Upon inspection, the frame was found to be cracked for the forth time and because it was held together by Popsicle sticks and bubble gum by this point, beyond repair. The driver's side door handle also had snapped off, perhaps a cry for help. We'll never know.

In the end, there was only so much modern mechanics could do. The time has come to start saving for something new. By the time I have the cash, dealers will run out to help me as soon as I step on the lot. Not so much because they want to sell me a car but because they're afraid I might fall, break a hip and sue.

History is about more than facts, Zinn says

By Nick Bratkovic
Kansas State Collegian

History is never just the facts, Howard Zinn said Tuesday night in Union Forum Hall, alluding to a remark former Kansas Senator Bob Dole made.

"I would say to Dole that there is no such thing as just the facts," Zinn said. "As soon as a fact is presented, it is no longer just fact."

Zinn packed Forum Hall for the lecture, which was part of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series, and gave the audience his story and view of history. He talked about when he was a 27-year-old freshman and his experiences as a professor.

"I always told students they were not going to spend the year without knowing where I stand," Zinn said.

He also said history without bias does not exist.

"There is no such thing as history written without point of view," Zinn said. "Any history presents a small selection out of an enormous mass of information."

Zinn gave audience members another side of history to enlighten them on the American Revolution.

He said students of history never learned of the mutinies within George Washington's army. The privates in the armies were living poorly while the officers lived well, he said.

Others also did not benefit from the revolution.

"The Revolutionary War was not glorious for blacks and Native Americans," Zinn said.

Zinn said not knowing about history makes a person naive.

"If a person doesn't know history, it is almost as if they are born yesterday," Zinn said. "A person can tell you anything, and there is no way to check anything they say."

Zinn questioned the prison systems, the economy, presidents, times of prosperity and war.

John Miller, freshman in open-option, said the lecture caused him to rethink everything.

"It made you think, talking about how facts can be distorted based on judgment and everything. It makes you think everything you see is not as it appears," Miller said.

Talat Rahman, professor of physics, said Zinn's book, "A People's History of the United States," gives a person a different view.

"If you read the book, it gives you a very different picture from The Wall Street Journal," Rahman said.

Manhattan high school students said the book gave them a greater understanding of what Zinn was trying to say. Class members who came to the lecture as part of Advanced Placement U.S. History read his book last year.

"It was really neat to come here and hear him develop his thoughts that he had somewhat developed in his book," Sarah Townsen, senior at Manhattan High School, said. "I saw how he came to the conclusions he had."

Ethan Fosse, freshman in open-option, said he felt it would have been nice if the lecture had been in more of a debate format.

"I agreed with everything he said, really, but I wanted a more conservative view to be able to disprove Howard Zinn," Fosse said.

By Ronald Blum
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — David Wells and the Yankees made sure payback was swift and brutal.

A five-run first inning blew Jaret Wright right out of the game, leaving the Indians with shocked, blank expressions.

Wells then stifled Cleveland with eight shutout innings before faltering in the ninth, and New York began its revenge for last year's playoff loss with a 7-2 victory Tuesday night in the opener of the American League championship series.

Paul O'Neill, Bernie Williams, Jorge Posada and Scott Brosius all hit run-scoring singles in the first off Wright, who beat the Yankees twice in Cleveland's five-game victory last fall.

Posada added a sixth-inning homer off Chad Ogea, and Williams hit a run-scoring double in the seventh as the Yankees won their fourth straight postseason game and their season-high 11th straight overall.

With their 118th win this year, the Yankees matched the major-league record set by the 1906 Chicago Cubs, who won 116 in the regular season and two more in the World Series.

New York, which had 11 hits, also set a team record with 21 consecutive shutout innings in the postseason, surpassing its 20 scoreless innings against the New York Giants in the 1921 World Series. The Yankees, who swept Texas in the first round, have outscored opponents 16-3 so far in the playoffs.

David Cone will try to extend the domination tonight in Game 2, pitching against Charles Nagy in Yankee Stadium's famous October twilight shadows.

A year ago, the Yankees also won the first game against Cleveland, but it was hardly dominating, with New York overcoming a 5-0 deficit to win 8-6. This time, the cheers started when Charisse Strawberry, the wife of stricken outfielder Daryl Strawberry, threw out the ceremonial first pitch, and they didn't stop.

The Yankees, still angered that Wright hit Luis Sojo with a pitch during spring training, fracturing a bone in the infielder's left hand, made sure right away that the Indians lost the opener of a postseason series for the eighth consecutive time.

Wells, 10-1 at Yankee Stadium during the regular season, might be funky off the field but on the mound he's strictly business. He struck out seven and walked one, leaving after Manny Ramirez hit a two-run homer with one out in the ninth, just the fifth hit for Cleveland. He retired 11 in a row at one stretch and 15 of 16.

His five-hitter last year gave the Yankees a 2-1 lead in the series, and New York was four outs away from beating the Indians in Game 4 before Sandy Alomar's tying eighth-inning homer off Mariano Rivera. Cleveland went on win the series and came within two outs of beating Florida in the World Series.

New York, which hasn't trailed in any postseason game this year, pounced on Wright with four straight singles leading off the first.

Pitching coach Mark Wiley came to the mound, trying to settle the 22-year-old right-hander.

Wright, chased by two three-run homers in the first-round opener against Boston last week then gave up another RBI single, this time to Williams.

All were hit hard. Just four batters in and Ogea already was warming up in the bullpen. Whatever magic Wright possessed over New York last fall was gone.

Tino Martinez bounced into a fielder's choice, and Tim Raines struck out, but Wright made it even worse with a wild pitch to Shane Spencer that allowed O'Neill to score from third.

Of Wright's 36 pitches, just 18 were strikes.

Ogea gave up an RBI single to Brosius then held the Yankees until Posada homered leading off the sixth. O'Neill and Williams chased Ogea with consecutive doubles opening the seventh.

Cats hope to stop Buffaloes, end Boulder drought

BY JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After tearing through three non-conference opponents and shutting down the Texas Longhorns in Big 12 Conference play, K-State leaves the purple sea of KSU Stadium this weekend for the first road game of the season in Boulder against 14th-ranked Colorado.

The Cats look to end 25 years of Rocky Mountain agony with a victory at CU, a feat that hasn't occurred since a 17-14 win in 1973. If K-State hopes to achieve this, it first must contain the Buffaloes vaunted passing offense.

Leading the aerial attack is junior quarterback Mike Moschetti, a community-college transfer. Moschetti is fourth in the Big 12 in passing efficiency and 26th nationally, and has been a key contributor to the Buffs' 5-0 start.

CHIAVERINI

K-State Coach Bill Snyder said Moschetti's style was similar to Texas quarterback Major Applewhite, an early opponent of the Cats.

"Moschetti seems to be a similar type of quarterback," Snyder said. "He's a very competitive, intelligent young guy. He throws the ball well and accurate. He can get out of harm's way and avoid the rush.

"He creates some problems similar (to Applewhite)."

Beyond Moschetti lies a talented core of wide receivers, led by senior Darrin Chiaverini.

Chiaverini is third in the league, with five receptions per game, and has led the Buffs in receiving yardage in four out of five games.

"Chiaverini is a great target," Snyder said. "He's got range, he can get up, and he's got excellent hands."

Balancing out the attack is sophomore Javon Green, who ranks 14th in the conference, with 2.6 receptions per game, and junior Marcus Stiggers, who posted 100 yards on Colorado State in CU's opener and might return Saturday after missing three games with an injury.

When analyzing Colorado's receiving core, Snyder said it was their variety of talent that poses a problem.

"They've got a good blend of range, size and speed that really makes them dangerous," he said.

The Cats will counter this attack with a defense that leads the NCAA in four categories, including pass efficiency (72.2 yards per game) and total defense (205.6 yards per game).

The Cats' defense, which also leads in scoring defense at 5.3 points per game, would like to equal the performance turned in by the Buffs' defense during K-State's last trip to Boulder, two years ago. Colorado blanked the Cats 12-0.

Although the Cats have been posting impressive stats through four games, defensive end Joe Bob Clements said the defense knows Moschetti will test them to the end.

MOSCHETTI

"Just by his presence on the field, you can tell he does what it takes to win," Clements said. "He's just a good athlete all around."

The biggest weakness in Colorado's offensive attack appears to be a young offensive line, which has surrendered 21 sacks on the season. While acknowledging this weakness, Clements said it wouldn't be a given.

"They've given up some sacks, but that doesn't mean they're going to do it against us," he said.

"They're not just going to give them to us. We've got to make them ourselves."

While much of the attention has been placed on Colorado's passing game, their running has continued to improve with each game. Linebacker Mark Simoneau said the defensive key would lie in suppressing their backfield, which would force the offense to throw.

"I think stopping the run is the main thing," Simoneau said. "If you can stop the run, then they'll have to throw the football."

Sophomore runner looks to continue success

BY FRANK FLATON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In the endurance sport of cross country, some competitors run well, while others just run. For sophomore Annie Wetterhus, it's an all-out acceleration to be the best.

Coming off a 1997 season that ended with Wetterhus named an NCAA qualifier, she has begun to duplicate last year's feats while looking to accomplish many more in 1998.

So far this season, Wetterhus has finished second at the Wichita Gold Classic, seventh in the Woody Greeno Invitational and she won the UMKC dual.

"This year has been pretty good," she said. "The first two meets were solid, and we're having good workouts. I feel like I'm ready to race well."

Cross country coach Randy Cole said Wetterhus has been leading K-State in all aspects.

"She has been leading the charge with her training and racing," he said. "She has been our top runner in three meets and has a very good work ethic."

Besides a berth in the NCAA tournament last year, Wetterhus was a member of the All-Big 12 team and placed third in the NCAA regional.

"Looking back at last year, I realized I just ran instead of putting expectations on myself," Wetterhus said. "This year, I want to push myself throughout the race and continue to attack instead of just settling into a comfortable position."

Wetterhus attended high school in Winfield, Kan., before her family moved to Morton, Ill. During her senior year, Wetterhus took third at state, 10th at the Foot Locker Midwest Regional (just missing the national tournament), and was an AAU All-American.

Despite her achievements in high school, Wetterhus said it took time to adjust to the collegiate level.

"Last year it was difficult getting used to college training, because it is a different way of training than in high school," she said.

Wetterhus said she believed her work ethic and competitive spirit push her toward success.

"If you want to be successful, you have to put in the miles," she said. "Since the races are real competitive, I get up for the good meets. I expect to do well for my team and my coaches because they have worked hard to train me. I owe it to them."

Cole said Wetterhus leads the team with her positive attitude and hard work.

"She is very positive. She tries to lead by example with work ethic and very consistent training," he said. "Wetterhus has her sights set at the highest level. Not only does she want to compete well in the Big 12 but on the national level as well."

Wetterhus also sets her sights high in the classroom. As a 4.0 math major, she recently made the NCAA Cross Country Academic All-American team. The team was based on the runners who competed at the national meet last year.

This year, she said she hopes for the team to go to nationals and place well. Personally, Wetterhus said she wants to be an All-American.

"If I don't strive for the highest goals, what's the point?" Wetterhus said. "I always aim high."

Cole said Wetterhus not only wants to do well this year, but she wants the team to do well, too.

"She had a taste of national competition last year," he said. "Obviously, she would like to do that again but this time with her team."

Ever since her first year in high school, Wetterhus has strived to be the best.

"As a freshman in high school, I was not very good," she said. "But, I always wanted to win the state championship, and the last race of my senior year I won the title in outdoor track.

"I believe if I keep working hard, success will come. If it's meant to be, I will be."

VIEWPOINT

JON BALMER

Mother Nature is not someone you want to mess with.

I found this out firsthand Sunday evening after attending the mother of all slip-n-slides at Arrowhead Stadium.

In what was billed as a contest between two bitter AFC West foes, the Chiefs-Seahawks matchup quickly turned into a crimson and blue bash at the beach.

The entire afternoon served as an ominous sign of things to come. However, being the narrow-minded man I am, after receiving free Chiefs tickets, I dismissed it as nothing more than a satisfying morning shower.

Even nearing kickoff, there were no thoughts of storms of biblical proportions taking over the stadium. The veteran tailgaters who continued to smoke sausage assured me of that.

Within the confines of Arrowhead, the crowd mentality seemed to lean toward ignorance. Sure, almost everyone in attendance was equipped with a parka or raincoat, but the vast display of shirtless fat guys reflected a mocking cry for the heavens to open its floodgates.

To borrow a line from a classic piece of literature, the sky was angry that day, my friends.

The first signs of disgruntled droplets began as the hands of time struck 7 p.m. No biggie. The fat guys remained shirtless, and the cheerleaders merely added a layer to their skimpy ensemble.

Then the true wrath began.

As the skies opened, Chiefs quarterback Rich Gannon started to treat the ball like an unwelcomed family member at Thanksgiving. With each touch, Gannon seemed to find the pigskin less user-friendly.

Even the Seahawks would have nothing to do with the football. Running back Ricky Watters, who must have felt cursed by his name, lost control of the ball, stripped by his own kneecap. Yes, the once-proud turf of grass guru George Toma quickly was turning into a liquid jungle.

I merely could sit back and absorb the outpour in my once-waterproof boots. Half the time, the lightning display overhead was more exciting than the action on the field.

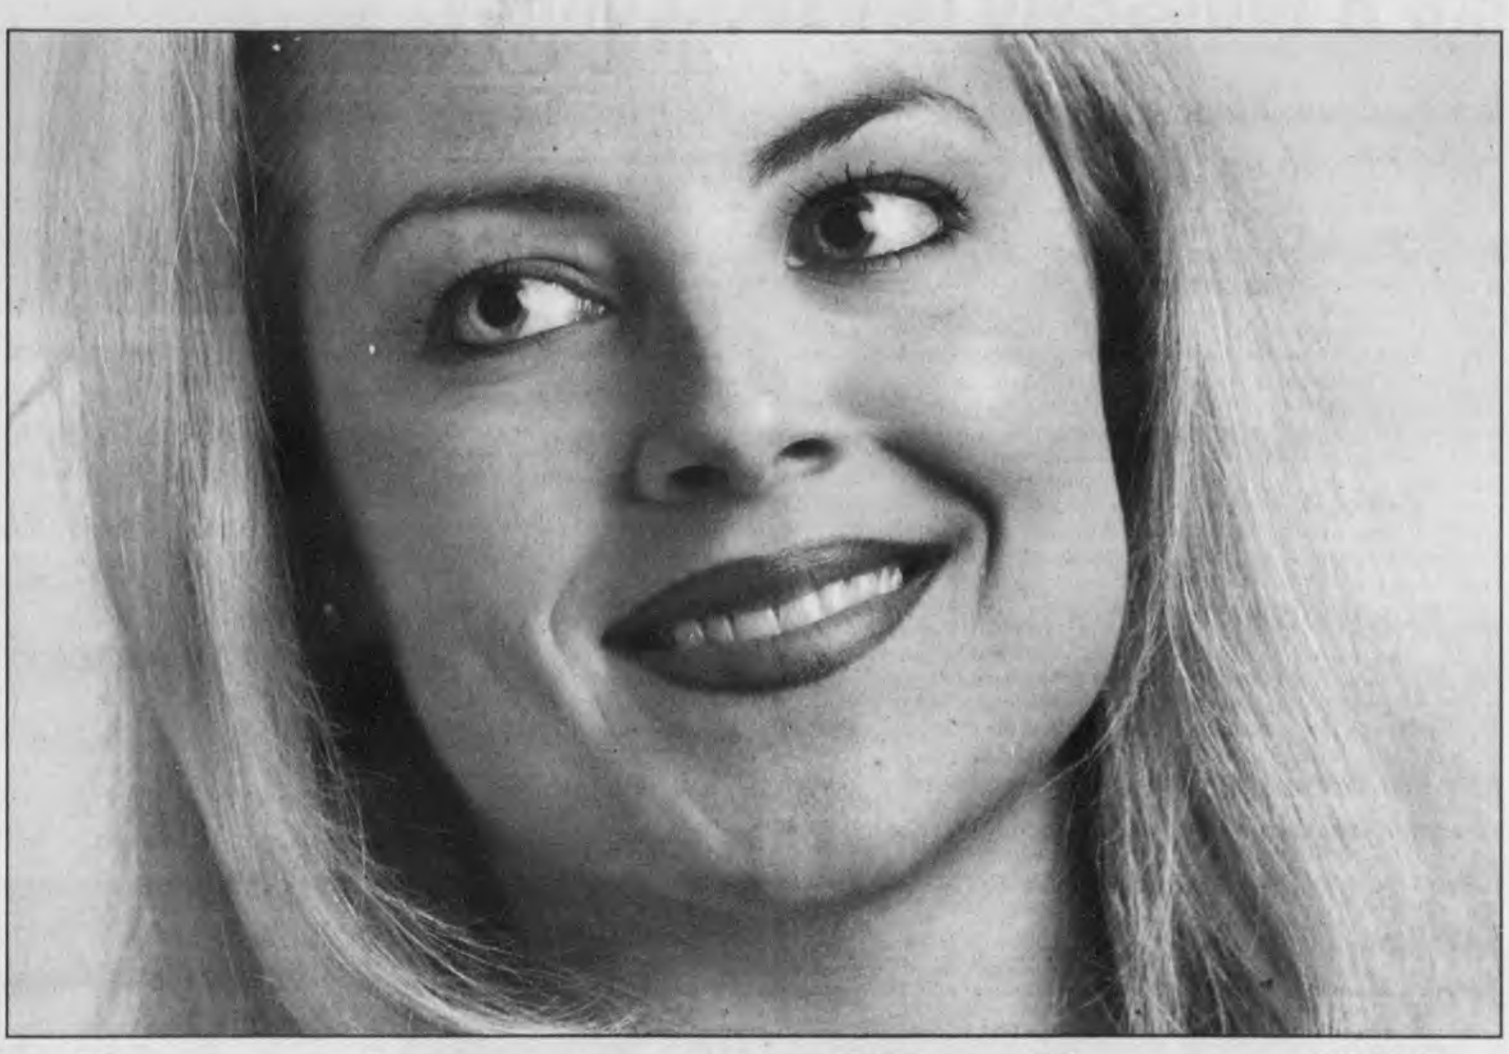
As the first quarter progressed, the rain began to take a horizontal turn, aided by increasing winds. Evidence of the previous night's Nebraska-Oklahoma State showdown became apparent as the end zone began to morph from "Chiefs" into "Huskers." Even the Arrow Vision operator couldn't resist putting in a plug for a rolling roof.

Gazing down at the waterfalls pouring down the walkway and the moat forming around the Seahawks' sidelines, I decided Gene Kelly must have been smoking something else when he belted out "Singing in the Rain."

After gaining 10 pounds of liquid in my boots, time stopped at 7:10 in the second quarter. Prompted by nearing lightning bolts and the new addition of Lake Arrowhead, NFL officials stopped the contest and advised all to take shelter in the concourse.

Already filled with drunken spectators thinking it was halftime, the concourse became a modern interpretation of the Titanic before the boat drug Leonardo DiCaprio into the sea. Herds of fans were compacted like the lower-level passengers on board the ill-fated voyage. I guess the faint smell of bratwurst and barbecue kept me from thinking the game was a James Cameron production.

After 54 minutes of getting to know my fellow man better, the skies decided to be merciful on the turf, and play resumed. Those who weren't already floating down Interstate 70 returned to their seats and witnessed a throwback to the grind-it-out days of football.



When the final knee was taken and the players exited with more than enough mud in their jerseys to remind them of the evening, a night that exceeded all expectations came to a merciful end.

Looking back at the Midwest monsoon that occurred Sunday night, I knew it would go down as one of the strangest moments in Kansas City history. There were walkway waterfalls, there were slipping kickers, there were even floating footballs.

Gene Kelly had no idea.

Facing challenges important to Miss Kansas USA

By Nick Bratkovic
Kansas State Collegian

Miss Kansas USA is walking around on K-State's campus. She is not here on tour, but rather as a student.

Amanda Carraway, junior in public relations, was crowned Miss Kansas USA last week in Wichita. Carraway said life since then has been one interview after another, and has taken time away from her studies.

Carraway has battled adversity in her life; when she was 15, her parents and sister were killed in a car crash. Carraway's grandparents raised her after the accident. She said her parents' deaths changed her perspective on life.

"Prior to the accident I was the most carefree teen-ager you could be," Carraway said.

"After the accident I just totally grew up overnight."

Carraway said she knew things would never be the same, but that she needed to continue her life.

"My parents had always instilled in me to set high goals in life and go after what I wanted," she said.

In 1996, she entered the Miss Teen Kansas pageant and won. She went on to participate in the Miss Teen USA contest. Her next move was to enter the Miss Kansas USA contest.

Carraway said the pageants aren't all fun and games, because she works with an interview coach and spends about four months selecting her competition wardrobe.

"It is not something you just do," Carraway said.

In the recent pageant, Carraway won two of the three categories — swimsuit and evening gown — and lost only the question-and-answer category by one-tenth of a point, placing second.

Carraway said the Manhattan community has been very receptive since she earned her crown. Some were even in Wichita when Carraway won.

Carraway's roommate Brooke Erickson, junior in secondary education, said she was confident her roommate would win.

"Not only is she beautiful, but she has a great personality," Erickson said.

Erickson said Carraway looked much calmer on stage than her competition.

"There were some girls on stage who were shaking, and Mandy was very calm and natural about it," Erickson said.

Erickson said Carraway is the perfect person to be Miss Kansas USA because of her strong beliefs.

"I think she is the perfect person for it because she is a really good role model, has good values and is confident," Erickson said.

In her countless appearances as Miss Kansas USA, which might include an appearance with her idol, Shania Twain, at a concert in Wichita, Carraway said she plans to talk about facing challenges of today.

"My words of inspiration would be to face challenges head on, and make yourself go on with life," Carraway said.

Understanding other religions goal of panel

By Shanda Parker
Kansas State Collegian

An understanding and acceptance of other religions was the goal of a panel discussion Tuesday as part of Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week.

More than 70 people attended the interfaith dialogue, "What Do We Believe?," between a panel of Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, and Muslim representatives in the K-State Student Union Little Theatre.

"I think it leads to a deeper, understanding and personal awareness of people with different backgrounds," Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities, said.

The campus committee on religious activities joined with the Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week committee to have the dialogue. The panel of speakers discussed religious issues.

Fallon said it is important to lead activities in conjunction with Racial/Ethnic Week, and he said he plans to continue it in the future. He said an understanding of others evolves from activities such as the interfaith dialogue.

"In many ways, human survival will depend upon how we learn to respect diversity and to live harmoniously," Fallon said.

In the past, religious conflicts have risen on campus, and Fallon said these discussions could help prevent them in the future.

"Locally on campus, a number of conflicts arise because of religious intolerance and insensitivity ... Often this is due to a misunderstanding and a lack of personal relationship," Fallon said.

Edward Larson, freshman in mechanical engineering, attended the discussion to gain an understanding of other religions.

"Mainly I came to learn what they believe in ... and to learn more and get rid of prejudice and the biases that have been taught to me," Larson said.

Chris Johnson, junior in biochemistry, attended the discussion to listen to different viewpoints and to gain knowledge.

"While in college, I think that it is an important part to address one's spirituality, and a discussion like this raises a lot of questions that one should address," Johnson said.

NATO will strike if Milosevic doesn't comply

Yugoslav president has failed to prove he plans to end harsh crackdown

By DUSAN STOJANOVIC
The Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Moving closer to NATO airstrikes, the United States told Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic on Tuesday that he has failed to show the West he really means to end his harsh crackdown in Kosovo province.

U.S. envoy Richard Holbrooke met Milosevic for the second day Tuesday after visiting the southern Serbian province, where Yugoslav forces were battling ethnic Albanian rebels seeking independence.

In Washington, President Clinton said Holbrooke was telling the Yugoslav leader that NATO is prepared to act if Milosevic fails to honor U.N. resolutions ordering him to withdraw from areas of conflict and allow a political settlement.

He warned that, unchecked, Serb violence in the province could lead to instability throughout the region.

"The stakes are high," Clinton said. "The time is now to end the violence in Kosovo."

After meeting with ethnic Albanian political leaders in Kosovo, Holbrooke said Serbian security forces still maintain a strong presence.

"U.S. diplomatic observers are doing a terrific job bringing us information, and the information they're bringing is not good," Holbrooke said.

Milosevic's seven-month crackdown against the secessionists has killed hundreds, left tens of thousands of ethnic Albanians homeless and led to growing resolve among NATO allies to stop the bloodshed by striking Yugoslav army targets if necessary.

Kosovo is a province of Serbia, the main republic of Yugoslavia. But ethnic Albanians form 90 percent of the 2 million-strong Kosovo population, and most favor self-rule.

Hours after Holbrooke left Kosovo for Belgrade, reporters saw about 100 Yugoslav military vehicles of all sorts — ranging from armored personnel carriers to trucks loaded with troops - moving outside Kosovo in an apparent show of Milosevic's compliance with international demands.

Additionally, state-run Serbian television claimed that all Serbian special police units were pulled out of the province — a key international demand.

Defense Secretary William Cohen told Congress a pullback of troops in Kosovo by Milosevic was not enough to ward off NATO attacks. Airstrikes might be followed by some "international presence" on the ground, he said.

However, Yugoslav government spokesman Miodrag Popovic told Associated Press Television News that the complete withdrawal of Yugoslav troops from Kosovo is out of question.

"Who in the right mind would do so? Is there a country in the world that would do so, especially with an armed rebellion on their hands?" Popovic asked.

Milosevic told Holbrooke in talks Monday night that his government is willing to seek a "political solution" to the crisis. But he also called the NATO threats against his country "a criminal act."

Holbrooke, who negotiated the 1995 agreement that ended the Bosnian war, was dispatched to the Yugoslav capital of Belgrade in what appeared to be a last-chance diplomatic effort.

NATO officials said they are ready to launch airstrikes. No decision is expected until Thursday, when NATO ambassadors meet in Brussels.

But Russian Foreign Minister Igor Ivanov told the Interfax news agency that Russia, a staunch ally of Serbia, would use its veto to stop any move to approve airstrikes on Yugoslavia by the U.N. Security Council, which was to discuss Kosovo later Tuesday.

The United States is trying to get Milosevic and the ethnic Albanians to agree on a deal that would defer for two or three years a decision on whether Kosovo would separate from Serbia. But the ethnic Albanians have refused to negotiate with Milosevic, and Secretary of State Madeleine Albright voiced skepticism Milosevic would adhere to any such plan.

"We are dealing with someone we never trusted," Albright said en route from Washington to Jerusalem, where she was on a Mideast peace initiative.

The rebel Kosovo Liberation Army, whose attacks on Serb police prompted the crackdown, has rejected any peace formula short of full independence. The KLA has urged NATO to attack.

"The Serbian war machine and its military and political structure must be destroyed," said Adem Demaci, a politician who speaks for the rebels.

CARING for your CAR

Routine automobile maintenance can help curb significant expenses

BY JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With parents no longer around to give constant reminders, routine car care is now a responsibility for many K-State students.

However, for those whose only experience with cars is knowing where to pump the gas, this could be a problem.

"I'm a firm believer in suggestive maintenance," said Steve Lindsey, mechanic with Dick Edwards Auto Repair. "Your car's manual should have a list that lets you know what needs to be done."

In this way, automobile manufacturers around the world are looking out for consumers. Since every car is different when it comes to specific maintenance, the people who build them create a detailed maintenance schedule to let owners know what needs to be checked and when.

The car-service industry has a list they generally follow for car care. Some important things to remember are oil changes, tire inflation levels, tire rotation, changing the fuel filter, changing the transmission fluid, getting brakes checked and changing the timing belt.

"When you get your oil changed, you can usually get belts, hoses, and fluid levels checked, too, all in one package," Richard Gray, owner of Gray's Westloop Service, said.

While these are just pointers for general care from mechanics around Manhattan, concerned car owners can check with any local garage for information on their specific make and model.

On top of routine checkups, it is also important that cars are winterized as cooler weather creeps in. For example, without an effective level of antifreeze, a cold day could mean a dead car.

"You want to make sure and go to a quality place before winter to get your car checked out," Gary Bonawitz, mechanic with the Napa Car Clinic, said. "If you get caught before the first freeze, it could really damage your engine."

When the snow begins to fall, tires also should be a significant concern. The less tread you have on your tires, the less traction you'll have on the ice. However, special snow tires or chains could give drivers confidence on icy days.

"Anything is going to be amplified in colder weather," Bonawitz said. "Don't neglect what your car is trying to tell you, because the winter will make your problems worse."

To many students, it might seem that they'll waste a lot of money on the constant care of their cars. However, experts say it's better to keep up with maintenance than to pay hundreds of dollars in future repairs.

"Routine maintenance is always cheaper in the long run," Lindsey said.

Car Service

The following is a general list of things to do in order to keep your car running at its best.

- An oil change is needed every three months or 3,000 miles.
- If you get a professional oil change, you have a choice to get belts, hoses and fluid levels checked all in one package.
- Check tire inflation levels every third or fourth time you fill up with gas.
- Rotate your tires every 6,000-8,000 miles.
- Change your fuel filter every 15,000-18,000 miles.
- Check your brakes every 18,000 miles.
- Change your transmission fluid every 30,000 miles.
- Change your timing belt every 60,000 miles.

Lecture series give students reason to stay for lunch

BY AMANDA LEVIN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Once they've found parking spots, most members of the campus community don't like to leave campus for lunch.

With a new lecture series at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, they won't have to.

The museum is offering a Food For Thought Lecture Series at 12:10 p.m. on the first Wednesday of each month, allowing interested students the opportunity to learn about art over lunch.

Laura Fatemi, museum staff member, will give the next Food For Thought lecture on Wednesday.

"I will be focusing the talk on Patricia DuBose Duncan, an artist from our permanent collection," Fatemi said.

Katherine Schlageck, coordinator of education and public programs at the museum, said the event serves people with busy schedules.

"People really enjoy this series, because it is focused and fits into the lunch hour," Schlageck said.

The museum also provides the Arch Cafe, which is open for lunch from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. during the week and 1 to 4 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

"Many museums do this type of event," Schlageck said.

"We designed it more for the campus, because it is a nice break and only lasts between 20 and 30 minutes."

Schlageck presented the first lecture in the series in September and focused on two artists whose work is included in the permanent collection.

The museum currently is displaying featured landscape pieces in the John Helm Memorial Gallery and featured women artists in the Ruth Ann Wefald and Mary Holten Seaton galleries, all from the permanent collection.

The lectures scheduled for November and December will feature local artists whose works are featured in the Kansas Artists Craftsmen Association Juried Exhibition.

Works from the exhibition will be on display in the museum from Oct. 16 to Jan. 3, 1999.

Schlageck said the calendar for other museum events can be obtained easily.

"The Food For Thought Lecture Series and all the other planned events for this fall semester are all displayed on our redesigned Web page," Schlageck said.

COMMISSION

annexed the Sargent Addition last February.

Manhattan resident Jim Craig said the decision involved hasty and arbitrary decisions with no justification other than to extend city limits. Craig said 30 of the annexed lots, 35 percent of the total addition, didn't need the improvements.

In fairness, the city should pay more than the 4 percent mandated by written policy, Craig and other speakers said.

The issue was important enough to Paul Jennings, who was unable to attend, that he voiced his opinion with a prerecorded message played by another resident at the meeting.

"If the city is doing this to protect our health and safety, then why isn't the city stepping forward to pay 100 percent or at least 50 percent?" Jennings said.

The commission voted to accept the petition's proposal, with the city paying 30 percent of the total cost.

Commissioner Roger Reitz said the increase was justified in this case.

"It seems a very appropriate place to make a judgment call," Reitz said.

The city also made steps forward on another city improvement, a limousine service.

The first reading for Craig McKim's request for a change in taxicab ordinances was approved unanimously by the commission as part of a proposal to start a limousine service to and from Manhattan Regional Airport.

McKim, junior in finance, approached the commission at the Sept. 1 meeting with the proposal, and the city administration was instructed to help McKim look into his options.

County Clerk Rich Doan proposed adding a new section to the ordinances for limousines specifically. The specific changes to the existing ordinances involved eliminating specific passenger fees and adding that limousine owners and drivers must pay the same annual licensing fees as their taxi counterparts.

"The vast majority of the requirements in the new section mirror the taxicab requirement sections," Doan said.

McKim said he plans to move ahead with his plans for the service. He said he probably will sell his existing vehicle and begin arrangements over winter break to purchase a more suitable vehicle, such as a Lincoln Towncar.

In other business, the commission tabled discussion of a false-alarm ordinance at the request of Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 and approved first readings to rezone land on the Grand Mere development, the Miller Ranch and an additional annexation for Grand Mere.

This meeting also marked the last legislative session for the commission in the Headquarters Fire Station, 2000 Denison Ave.

The Oct. 20 meeting will be at the renovated City Hall building, 1101 Poyntz Ave.

■ Research helps lead to better production, yield for wheat farmers.

By SHANDA PARKER
Kansas State Collegian

The Wheat Genetic Resource Center in Throckmorton Hall is a small part in the big picture of feeding the world.

Scientists in the center work to form more productive germ plasm that leads to better wheat production. K-State was chosen in 1984 to house the center to focus on the genetics of wheat crop improvement.

Bikram Gill, distinguished professor of plant pathology and the director of the Wheat Genetic Resource Center, said K-State is the ideal place for the center, because it is in the middle of America's wheat belt.

"There is great opportunity here," Gill said.

At the WGRC, scientists isolate wheat genes chemically to determine their function. Scientists' goals are to find genes resistant to disease, insects and fungi pathogens. Identifying these genes allows improvement in wheat seeds.

Gill said from 1986 to 1998 there has been a 1-percent increase in wheat production in Kansas, mainly due to the introduction of new germ plasms.

"It is a very valuable service to the U.S. wheat industry," Gill said.

The WGRC support started with a grant from the United States Department of Agriculture. This year, the USDA gave a $250,000 grant to the center. The Kansas Wheat Commission also has helped fund the center with an $80,000 grant each year.

The WGRC is a national and international center that brings together researchers around the world to work on the improvement of wheat.

"We provide a platform for people to get together on common problems," Gill said.

Scientists from Australia, Canada, China, Germany, Hungary, India and Japan are working at K-State on the collection of gene species.

"We share expertise and resources to become more effective," Gill said. "We are good in some things, and they are good in something else."

A high priority at the center is to identify the DNA in a plant and to continue to expand the collection of gene species. Gill said the process is continual, and once a resistant gene is introduced to a plant, the gene only is effective from two to three years before the plant becomes resistant.

"It is a constant cycle, always trying to keep a step ahead of the insect or fungi pathogen," Gill said. "It is a game or a fight."

Karri Haen, senior in biochemistry and microbiology, works between 25 and 30 hours a week in the lab. She is working on her own genetic mapping project. Haen said it has been a very good opportunity for her to be working on such valuable research as an undergraduate.

"Being allowed to do some serious research — that alone in itself is valuable," Haen said. "You take your work home with you when you are in research — it is something you are constantly thinking about."

Lili Maleki, first-year graduate student in genetics and plant pathology, has worked at the center for 1 1/2 years.

Maleki said the work can be challenging but realizing that you are making a difference is important.

Maleki said her work is just a small part in the big picture of feeding the world.

"We are on the leading edge with a new science," Maleki said. "The science we do is really exciting. ... It's up and coming."

3rd Jardine Terrace building under construction, renovation

By SUZANNE WILSON
Kansas State Collegian

A third building is under renovation at the Jardine Terrace Apartment complex to add to Wiley Apartments, undergraduate housing provided by the Department of Housing and Dining Services.

The renovation of building Y will include new carpeting, kitchen cabinets and ceiling fans, as well as some new furniture. Christina Sanchez, Jardine apartments coordinator, said building Y is scheduled to be online next year.

Sanchez said the apartments are available to students who have lived in the residence halls for at least a semester and who have junior or senior standing.

One-bedroom unfurnished apartments cost $335. Two-bedroom unfurnished apartments cost $400. Furnished apartments cost $45-$60 more. Rent includes gas, water, sewage and trash.

Sanchez said having the gas paid is a big convenience for most students, because it includes heat and use of the stove.

"We also work with people who want to do payments through financial aid or off of scholarships," Sanchez said. "We are very understanding."

Jennifer Lange, graduate student in accounting and resident at Wiley apartments, said she really enjoys having her phone bill with K-State Telecommunications through Wiley Apartments.

"We don't have to pay for installation or local calls, and we also get the option of ethernet," Lange said.

Lange said she really wanted to move into the Wiley Apartments because she was familiar with the services provided by Housing and Dining, and she felt comfortable with their maintenance.

"It's a quick response team. They really go out of their way to assist our residents," Sanchez said. "We have student service-repair technicians who actually live in the complex, and they are on-call 24 hours a day."

Kris Kothe, senior in horticulture therapy and resident at Wiley Apartments, said it's nice to finally have more space after living in the residence halls. She said there are so many people in the residence halls, and it can be hard to study with so many distractions.

"Students comment that they really like the peace here," Sanchez said.

While students get more privacy in the on-campus apartments, Lange said they still feel like they know their neighbors.

"People are more mature here, and we know a lot of them," Lange said. "I feel comfortable confronting them."

officials expressed confidence they would prevail, thus making Clinton the third president in history to face possible impeachment proceedings.

"The fact of the matter is, it is about obstruction of justice. It is about lying to the American people," Armey told reporters Tuesday. "It is about using all the instruments and many of the people in the White House ... to go out and tell a story that the president himself knew to be untrue."

The GOP-controlled House Judiciary Committee approved a sweeping impeachment inquiry in a party-line vote on Monday, after first brushing aside two Democratic alternatives.

With midterm elections less than a month away, political calculations weighed heavily as the issue moved toward a vote on the House floor.

Leaders are likely to redraft a plan offered in the Judiciary Committee on Monday that would have limited the scope of the inquiry to the Lewinsky affair, and they called for it to be concluded by Nov. 25. One possible change would set a deadline of Jan. 1, a date that Rep. Henry Hyde, the committee chairman, has set as his goal for concluding work on the issue.

A second proposal defeated on Monday, offered by Rep. Howard Berman, D-Calif., would have required the committee to first decide whether Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr's allegations, if proven, would constitute impeachable offenses. If so, the Judiciary Committee then would be empowered to investigate with unlimited time.

Party sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Democratic rank-and-file group remains divided, however. Some liberal lawmakers from safe seats favor no inquiry on grounds that Clinton's offenses don't rise to the level of impeachment. But others, including moderates who face difficult election battles, are likely to vote for the GOP measure, officials said.

"What works in nine districts doesn't work in the 10th," said Rep. Gary Ackerman, D. - N.Y. said. He said the Democratic leadership is "trying to figure out where the equilibrium is."

The White House would like all Democrats to vote against the Republican plan, officials said, to buttress the claim that the GOP is pushing a partisan impeachment probe. But House Democratic leader Dick Gephardt's objective is somewhat different, officials said — it is to ensure the re-election of as many Democrats as possible this fall.

White House officials — concerned with the president's fate — have circulated polling in recent days suggesting that Democrats will fare best nationally in the elections if they oppose the GOP measure. They said Republicans are vulnerable to election-year criticism that they want to open the way to a prolonged investigation at a time when the public favors a swift end to the impeachment drama.

Republican polling has detected a change, as well, according to sources who spoke on condition of anonymity. A survey taken recently for the Republican National Committee reported an increase in the number of Democrats intending to vote compared with a few weeks ago, although it still lags behind Republicans.

Against that backdrop, some junior Republicans spoke privately about the prospects for a last-minute compromise on the impeachment inquiry with Democrats, although any type of agreement seemed unlikely before the roll is called on Thursday.

One committee Republican who declared his reluctance in voting against Berman's proposal on Monday, Rep. Asa Hutchinson, R-Ark., said, "I think we always need to look at ways to generate Democratic support for the inquiry, but we voted out a fair resolution that followed the Watergate model with broad support and we need to stick with it."

With both parties pointing toward Thursday's floor vote, the committee's lead GOP investigator, David Schippers, had a news conference to declare that his report to the committee on Monday had been "straight down the middle. ... I think we could have been a lot harsher if we wanted to be and take the role of a prosecutor," said Schippers, who outlined evidence of 15 possible grounds for impeachment.

■ $4.5 million project adds 21,000 square feet of space.

By GABE ECKERT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a year of construction and hassle, it's almost back to business as usual for the city of Manhattan.

City offices temporarily were relocated to Manhattan Town Center and the fire department headquarters while City Hall underwent a $4.5 million renovation. The offices will reopen Monday at the renovated City Hall building at 1101 Poyntz Ave.

Ron Fehr, assistant city manager, said the renovated facility will increase the quality of services provided to Manhattan residents.

"The old building was built to provide three primary services: the fire department, the police department and jail and the regular city administration offices. The old building was not user-friendly from a public-service and staffing standpoint," he said. "We wanted to make the improved building more user-friendly and staff efficient."

The renovation provided the 42-year-old building with an additional 21,000 square feet of space, a new public-meeting room, a centralized customer-service area and improved office space. Additional parking, a new roof and enhanced accessibility are other features of the renovation.

Mayor Steve Hall said the renovation, which was completed nearly four months ahead of schedule, will benefit the entire city.

"We will be able to give more prompt and efficient service with the renovated facility," he said.

"The new facility will also be much more customer friendly."

The new City Hall building will include the city manager's office, the city clerk's office, customer-service offices, the Department of Human Resources, the Department of Public Works, the Department of Utilities and the city auditorium.

Fehr said the temporary space used to house the city offices will continue to be used but in different ways. He said the space at Manhattan Town Center will revert back to retail use, and the space at the fire department headquarters will be used to train firefighters.

Fehr said he is excited about the completed renovation.

"We are moving back much earlier than we anticipated and are very pleased with the time frame and the quality of the work that was done," he said.

Holton, Topeka schoolchildren suspended for gun incidents

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOLTON, Kan. — A middle school student faces a yearlong suspension after bringing an unloaded semi-automatic pistol to school to show to his friends.

The incident at Holton Middle School occurred Tuesday, the same day Topeka's school superintendent decided to suspend a 5-year-old kindergarten student for a full year for bringing a loaded handgun to school. The gun went off accidentally in a classroom, but no one was injured.

■ OUR OPINION
The Collegian editorial board considers the issue of youth violence.

The boy will be tutored at the Topeka district's Second Chance School. It is a school for students who have been expelled for weapons violations or violent acts, and most of its pupils are from middle and high schools.

School officials in both districts have not made either boy's name public.

State and federal laws say students who bring guns to school will be suspended for 186 school days, the equivalent of a full academic year. However, Kansas law allows superintendents to modify an expulsion if

■ Death rate falls for 2nd-straight year; new infections still up 40,000.

By LAURA MECKLER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The number of Americans dying of AIDS fell a dramatic 47 percent last year as powerful new drugs kept the disease at bay for thousands of patients.

It's the second-straight year that AIDS deaths have dropped — this time nearly twice as fast as in 1996 and enough to push the disease out of the top-10 causes of death in this country for the first time since 1990, the government said Wednesday.

Still, last year also saw some 40,000 new infections, a number that isn't dropping, meaning more people are living with and potentially spreading AIDS and the virus that causes it. Doctors said they worry the wonder-drug combinations that have been so successful eventually will stop working.

The government's annual review of births and deaths also found continued declines in homicides, infant mortality and births to teen-agers.

The drop in AIDS deaths happened across gender and race, although the rate among white men fell the

JUGGLING JAM SESSION

IVAN KOZAR/KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Paul Houston (right), junior in graphic design, and Ryan Nogle, senior in horticulture, juggle Tuesday evening on the front lawn of the K-State Student Union. Houston and Nogle were juggling to help promote Juggling Club.

Juggling Buddies

Club gains members, but looking for more

By Kelly Evenson

It seems juggling might not be hard after all.

The only prerequisite is a belly button.

"If you have a belly button, you can juggle," said Ryan Nogle, senior in horticulture and member of Juggling Club.

Juggling Club has not been in existence for long. In order to be an official club on campus, a group must have at least five members. Juggling Club reached that number last spring and has surpassed it this semester.

The club conducted its first official meeting Tuesday night in the free-speech zone. The meetings have no set order or agenda, but the group gets together and juggles a variety of things such as clubs, tennis balls, Hackey-Sacks and hammers, Nogle said.

"I've dropped a hammer on my foot once," he said. "You become aware of where the position of your body is to the hammers."

Paul Houston, junior in graphic design, juggles up to four balls at one time and can juggle on stilts.

"At the Children's Miracle Network, I was juggling on stilts," Houston said. "It happens about three times a year and was part of a fund-raiser."

The club's main goal is to get together and learn from each other, Krista Bright, junior in pre-psychology, said.

■ MORE INFO?
For more information on the Juggling Club, e-mail club president Krista Bright at klb1316@ksu.edu or call 776-0492.

"Usually, one of the guys knows how to do something, and then he shows the rest of us," she said.

Juggling not only is good for its entertainment value but also helps to relieve stress during peak times in the school year, Bright said.

"It's pretty good when you get stressed out from stuff, and you can juggle," she said. "You have to concentrate on what you are doing and forget for a while about what was bothering you."

One of the more unusual and less dangerous tricks is juggling using the feet.

"It's actually a foot bag (Hacky-Sack) trick," said James Widman, sophomore in horticulture and landscape design. "I was more interested in foot bag, and I learned it that way."

Cub members recently attended the Little Apple Festival and entertained the crowd.

"We walked around juggling and taught some kids how to juggle," Houston said. "There were some big crowds around us to see the tricks."

Among activities the club is considering are teaching juggling classes through UFM and the Manhattan Department of Parks and Recreation.

"A lot of kids seem interested in juggling," Houston said. "Some know the basic ball throws, and we will just expand on that."

No one in the club has attempted to juggle a chainsaw, though Nogle said that is often the first question asked of him.

"The people that juggle chainsaws practice eight hours a day, five days a week. I don't want to do that," he said.

"IF YOU HAVE A BELLY BUTTON, YOU CAN JUGGLE."

Boy shot with arrow while walking home

JUNCTION CITY — A 14-year-old boy was arrested on suspicion of attempted first-degree murder for allegedly shooting another boy in the chest with an arrow, police said.

Shawn Jackson, 13, of Junction City, was in satisfactory condition Wednesday at Stormont-Vail Hospital in Topeka, spokeswoman Nicole Basso said.

The name of the suspect was not released because he is a juvenile.

Someone saw the boy Tuesday afternoon walking near railroad tracks with an arrow protruding from his chest and called the fire department, Lt. Rick Rook said.

Shawn's father, Keith Jackson Sr., said his son took the long way home from school Tuesday because bullies had beaten him up before on another route.

Shawn told his father that while he was walking home from school, some boys he did not know yelled at him and asked his name.

Keith Jackson said his son tried to ignore the boys, who asked his name again. When Shawn asked why they wanted to know, they responded, "We'll show you," then fired the arrow into Shawn's chest, Keith Jackson said.

One of Shawn's lungs was punctured by the arrow, but no other vital organs were damaged, his father said.

Columnist impressed with K-State's success

When Douglas Looney, senior sports columnist for The Christian Science Monitor, walked onto the K-State campus again, he had one thing in mind.

He wanted to find out how academics and athletics maintained a strong bond while achieving high standings simultaneously.

A column by Looney in a 1989 edition of Sports Illustrated let the world know that K-State had the worst overall record in the game's history. After the article was published, President Jon Wefald invited Looney to return to K-State when the team improved.

"I know K-State, and I keep in touch with Wefald," Looney said. "When K-State was good this year in football, I thought it was amazing that they combined both academics and athletics."

With this year's football successes, Looney returned to focus on the improvement in both areas.

Athletic and academic facilities have undergone simultaneous improvements. With the football team going from the depths of a struggling season a few years ago to the success of being ranked nationally, several academic projects also have been completed.

Hale Library and Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art have been established in recent years, and Looney said the continuation of such improvements only can make K-State a more well-rounded university.

"There's not much to be grumpy about at K-State," Looney said. "It's a happy campus."

The column was published in Tuesday's edition of The Christian Science Monitor and can be found on the Internet at www.csmonitor.com.

Stores get early start on Christmas season

CHICAGO — It's beginning to look a lot like Christmas, everywhere you go, and it has looked that way since September, maybe earlier.

"It's unbelievable, isn't it?" said Diane Swonk, deputy chief economist for Bank One, chuckling at the thought of city sidewalks, busy sidewalks, dressed in holiday style, even before Columbus Day.

There's good reason for it.

"Retailers have found that the sooner we start shopping for Christmas items, the more we're going to spend," said Audrey Guskey, professor of marketing at Duquesne University in Pittsburgh, Pa. That's especially important because department stores make nearly half their profits in the last three months of the year.

Lord & Taylor at the Garden State Plaza mall in Paramus, N.J., set up its wing of Christmas decorations two weeks ago, padding walls in red and putting up 10 small Christmas trees loaded with ornaments. Christmas candles and cinnamon-scented potpourri were on sale next to a shelf of Godiva chocolates accented with garlands and lights.

"I think it's too early," said shopper Rosa Gonzalez of Paterson, N.J. "It gets me nervous. I got to think about all the money I've got to spend."

On Chicago's State Street, the Carson Pirie Scott department store has a window display of Christmas ornaments already, and several drugstores have had shelves full of Christmas lights and other merchandise since September.

Marshall Field's will not unveil its famously grand Christmas-theme window displays until Nov. 7, but the store has a Christmas shop open all year. A modest window display already is devoted to the holiday. Shoppers who go into the basement will find an array of ornaments, Santas and snowmen.

At Nordstrom's department stores, shoppers can buy Christmas merchandise already, but company tradition is to keep Christmas displays — and music — out of the stores until after Thanksgiving.

"We think the customers appreciate being able to celebrate each holiday in its own turn with friends and family," spokeswoman Amy Jones said.

Don't look for so much as a strand of tinsel at the Shaker Messenger gift shop in Holland, Mich. Owner Diana VanKolken won't put out anything Christmas-related until after Thanksgiving.

"I'm the last holdout," she said, laughing heartily. "I believe in keeping the holidays where they belong."

Tracy Mullin, president of the National Retail Federation, said while some people dislike the early emphasis on Christmas, stores are in the business of giving people what they want.

Preservation methods focus of art workshop

Students who believe they might be the next Picasso can learn to preserve their work for future generations of art lovers, and the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art will provide an opportunity at 7 tonight.

The archival workshop will be presented by museum employees Laura Fatemi and Lindsay Smith.

"We'll be talking about materials used in archival matting," said Smith, exhibitions designer at the Beach Museum. "We're in the preservation business."

Smith said artwork, especially works on paper, such as paintings and photographs, are done with acidic and chemical materials that can deteriorate over time. Sometimes simple things such as bad matting, light, tape or other adhesives can destroy a particular piece, Smith said.

"This is a hands-on demonstration in matting and framing," Fatemi said. "We'll have a table set up with different papers and products you can get locally to help with your artwork."

The workshop is expected to run about 90 minutes.

Yugoslav president offered 2nd chance to meet demands

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — A U.S. envoy gave Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic another chance Wednesday to bow to international demands and avoid NATO airstrikes, but Milosevic remained defiant.

Following his meeting with envoy Richard Holbrooke, Milosevic's office said attempts were made to overcome the differences over the crisis in Kosovo province.

Referring to the possibility of NATO airstrikes, the Yugoslav statement said "the threats which are delivered to our country jeopardize the continuation of the political process."

It accused foreign governments of waging "a media campaign against our country" through "one-sided and fabricated reports."

Before the talks ended, President Clinton reiterated that Milosevic has to end his crackdown in Kosovo, pull out his special police force and resume negotiations. Kosovo is a province of Serbia, the main republic of Yugoslavia.

Ninety percent of its 2 million inhabitants are ethnic Albanians, and most favor independence or substantial self-rule.

Milosevic launched his crackdown Feb. 28 against the ethnic Albanian Kosovo Liberation Army, which is fighting for independence for Kosovo. Hundreds have been killed, and more than 270,000 people have been driven from their homes.

Despite mounting evidence of Milosevic's non-compliance and a U.N. declaration confirming it, Washington, D.C., seemed to lack the international consensus needed to bomb Milosevic into compliance.

The United States is trying to get Milosevic and the ethnic Albanians to agree on a deal that would defer for two or three years a decision on whether to separate Kosovo from Serbia.

"We are continuing to push for military action against the Serbs," State Department spokesman James Rubin said. "NATO is not there yet."

U.S. officials also face strong opposition from Russia, whose Defense Minister Igor Sergeyev said Wednesday the move could lead to even more bloodshed in Kosovo.

"This is not a penalty or punishment of an isolated country but almost a real war," Marshal Sergeyev said in Athens, Greece.

Milosevic's repeated references to the "threats" undermining chances for peace appeared aimed at playing on those divisions, not only between the Russians and NATO but within the Western alliance itself.

"I do not believe the United States can be in a position, I do not believe NATO can be in a position of letting tens of thousands of people starve or freeze to death this winter," Clinton said.

In Brussels, NATO Secretary-General Javier Solana said, "NATO will take a decision of their own." That implied the alliance would not insist on the U.N. approval some U.S. allies and Russia believe necessary.

A NATO official who asked not to be named said Wednesday that an estimated 14,000 Yugoslav army troops remain in Kosovo — down from 36,000 10 days earlier.

That is in addition to 11,000 special military and anti-terrorist police, half the total in all of Yugoslavia.

He also said 50,000 refugees remain without shelter and that at least 15 percent of buildings in central and western Kosovo have been damaged or destroyed.

Western leaders said all moves to end the conflict must be verifiable and irreversible.

Mike Green speaks to members of the K-State greek community about alcohol awareness Wednesday night in McCain Auditorium. Green's speeches at college campuses across the nation try to make alcohol awareness a part of every college student's life. Green, a recovering alcoholic, first visited K-State in summer 1997 at the Sigma Chi national workshop.

Speaker says alcohol must be used responsibly

By Lauran Cowdrey
Kansas State Collegian

Members of K-State's greek community were educated and inspired Wednesday evening by recovering alcoholic and fellow greek Mike Green.

For the past 10 years, Green has spoken at more than 1,000 campuses nationwide in an effort to make alcohol awareness an integral part of every college student's life.

Greeks Advocating the Mature Management of Alcohol teamed up with Greek Affairs, Alcohol and other Drug Education Services, the Little Apple Task Force and Sigma Chi fraternity to bring Green to K-State.

Kenny Wilks, member of Sigma Chi and GAMMA representative, said Green promotes a responsible and mature college lifestyle.

"What he says really ties in to what our goals are," Wilks said.

Green's program on alcohol awareness is not to detour college students from drinking but to promote and educate students about a mature and responsible way to have fun.

"I don't stand up here and preach," Green said. "I like to have fun myself. I don't have anything against alcohol, but if you choose to do it, you learn how to do it right."

Green is a recovering alcoholic, but his presentation focused mainly on a problem he calls "one nighters." He said 90 percent of college students will never become alcoholics, yet, while they are in school, they will have a series of nights when they binge drink.

As a Theta Chi fraternity alumnus, his presentation also focused on the greek community working as a family to prevent alcohol-related accidents and deaths.

"We're in here for a family, because we love each other," he said. "Not because we want to get each other drunk."

Green urged students to take control of their life and stop pressuring other students and friends to drink. The title of his presentation was " A Freedom to Choose."

"I don't give my friends a hard time for drinking, and they don't give me a hard time for not drinking. That is called freedom of choice," he said.

He used anecdotes and stories of college students to send his message, but amongst all the laughter, the seriousness of the problem of college drinking sunk in. Green passed out fliers to students to take home and evaluate their own drinking habits. The fliers also had a list of situations to avoid and what to do in case of an emergency.

"The sheet he handed out and the time he gave us to think about it was a big thing," Wilks said. "You can't do anything until the students identify the problem."

OUR VIEW

Children need love, education in lives

A middle school student brought an unloaded gun to school.

A 15-year-old high school student brought a stolen handgun to school, along with a loaded ammunition clip.

A 5-year-old kindergarten student brought a loaded handgun to school, and it discharged in his backpack.

A 14-year-old was harassed by a group of boys on his way home — they decided to shoot him in the chest with an arrow.

A high school student brought several guns to school one morning and began executing people in the cafeteria.

This is what our children have done in Holton, Kan.; Manhattan; Topeka; Junction City; and Springfield, Ore., respectively.

Many of us don't have the luxury of thinking about youth violence remotely campus is filled with non-traditional students and faculty who have children of their own. For many, youth violence is a disaster waiting to strike close to our homes, close to our hearts.

Is youth violence on the rise? Many of us spout rhetoric about the nature of violence today. We seem to think there was a time when Donna Reed sat in every household and quality time was spent in the sitting room with dad reading the paper, mom helping the kids with their homework, the dog that never shed lying in the corner and Jackie Gleason on the television.

Family values — we're all familiar with them, right?

This demented viewpoint has done more to cause youth violence than to prevent it. The 1950s saw its share of problems: street gangs, lynchings, alcohol and drug dependency, child abuse, spousal abuse, etc. We have a tendency to look at the past through rose-colored glasses, and that affects our perception of the way things really were. It is true that juvenile crime has increased but not to the degree we all think it has. We need to realize that the real difference between then and now is that lately, journalists have been doing a better job of reporting about violent crime.

Violent crime is news, but sometimes the magnitude of violent crime gets blown out of proportion by journalists. Journalists must exercise more moderation and less sensationalism when reporting crime, just as we all should exercise moderation when we view the evening news. We all need to be more responsible.

The fact that violence permeates our culture has a dangerous double effect: We are desensitized by violence, and we are led to believe that violence is everywhere. Desensitization leads to devaluation of human life. It leads to people firing guns out of anger before thinking about the results of their actions. By the same token, believing that violence is everywhere causes people who normally would not purchase a gun to arm themselves to the teeth and to keep loaded guns around their houses in case they become crime victims. The very fear of crime often can be as dangerous as the crime itself.

We need to believe that other children are not our enemies. The best way to prevent children from making wrong choices in life is by showing them they have something to live for. People do not commit crimes when they know they have something to lose. Many of you would be unlikely to commit a violent act when you consider how it will affect your college career and your chances of getting a job in the future. It is when we feel unneeded, unloved and uninvolved that we begin to look for other things to hang on to like drugs, alcohol and violence. By turning our backs on our children, the problems of violence only will get worse.

Parents need to be firm but fair with children when they misbehave. They cannot let their children walk all over them. Children need to be taught to be responsible for their actions. They need to be taught not to take their anger out on other people.

Parents also need the courage to seek help if they cannot correct their children's behavior. We like to believe that our children are perfect, because if they aren't, that means there is something wrong with us. We get so caught up believing in the Donna Reed family, we fail to see when things go wrong. No child is perfect. Sometimes children are born with a physical handicap, or sometimes they are born with a behavioral disorder. For the child's well-being, we need to have the strength to deal with both.

Our children depend on us.

THE ART OF PRIORITIZATION

Looking out for No. 1

VIEWPOINT

KEN WELLS

Well, it's too late in the semester to be filled with optimism and enthusiasm. It's never to early to get burnt out, though. Maybe you're at that point already.

Maybe you're doing your best to bolt across campus in 10 minutes through idiots playing "Red Rover" and sucking face on sidewalks to classes where your instructor's apathy for your academic success, or lack thereof, is deafening. Maybe you're also holding down a thankless job at Long John McArby's, where your boss' idea of "positive feedback" is polarized amplifier output, and you get paid with whatever's left on the grill at the end of the day.

Maybe your roommate is on speed and has redecorated the apartment four times in the past 15 minutes. Maybe your car, some unrecognizable 1952 Hungarian import, no longer resembles a kinetic sculpture but a purely decorative and thoroughly immobile piece of modern art double-parked in the lot after the hamsters powering it snuck free in the middle of the night. Maybe the utility companies don't just send you bills but personalized cards now, detailing what they'll do to each of your fingers as soon as they catch you.

Maybe your landlord doesn't expect you to answer the phone anymore. Maybe your floor or sorority or fraternity expects you to spend the next eight hours making something pointless out of crepe paper for the incredibly important social event that will be forgotten completely before sunrise.

Everybody wants a piece of you. It would make you feel important if you had time to feel anything.

There are two general responses to being swamped: shutting down and burning out. If you shut down, you become a formless piece of human Jell-O. It's not that bad. It does make the year go faster. Burning out, though, is where the most danger lies.

You don't want to let down Dr. Moo, who is teaching some class in bovine physics (you don't know what it is, but it fulfills requirements) and expects you to be at every class. You don't want to disappoint your boss at Long John McArby's, even though the kindest thing he's ever said to you is that at least when you spit you don't choke yourself. You don't want to let down everyone in your social circle, despite the fact that you have a million and one things you need to do before you start scissor-and-taping together cheap crafts into a display about a theme that was banal when they thought of it and just plain stupid now.

So you try to please them all, and you do your best to kill yourself in the process.

You can destroy yourself more efficiently than any of those threats and deadlines from external sources. Wait until you push yourself beyond your capacity, to that point where you see your breaking point, pass it and are lying on your floor blubbering about how you can't wait to see "Night at the Roxbury." If you're shot in the head by your roommate at this point, it's an act of mercy; you're Old Yeller.

The first rule of war and college is "You are not Superman." You can't do it all, not even with coffee. Pick and choose your battles. Keep in mind that everything you don't, or can't, do has a consequence. Sometimes you can't catch all the balls you juggle; that's not instant and automatic failure, but trying to can be. Be aware of what you can and can't put off. If you don't return your books to Hale Library, realize they don't send the bloodsucking squirrels until the third month, so you can bide that time.

Whatever you do and whatever they say, do not let them convince you that you exist for them, no matter who they are. Maybe you owe them something, but you owe yourself more. No responsible person likes to be selfish, but sometimes it's absolutely necessary. Nobody else will tell you this anymore. Take enough time for yourself to regain your strength, then back into the fray.

Even taking days off has its down side; you could lose a paycheck, a class of notes, maybe a spot in the ESPN/USA Today poll. But if by the end of the year you can look back and smile on what you did, nobody will remember a moment you needed for yourself.

Sometimes being close-minded has its advantages

VIEWPOINT

SAM SACKETT

Teachings on having an open mind often are welcomed with agreement and warm, compassionate feelings. When you are taught to be open to other people's opinions, you tend to assume this is a good thing. After all, everyone else seems to think so.

Who wants to say something offensive toward someone's way of living or ideology? Aside from the few mean-spirited people we all encounter, most are generally well-intending. But having an all-open mind is not conducive for productive living.

Recognizing a person as having a problem and caring for that person can occur concurrently. Your close friends and family members probably do this all the time. They recognize a bad habit or addiction in your life and call you on it. Being told you need to change didn't require your friends to stop caring for you. The opposite is true. Despite your initial frustration or anger toward the person who confronted you, a thankfulness for their boldness often occurs. It is much more angering if your good friends say nothing. If you discover a long-lived problem in your life and find out that your friends knew all along, think of how disappointed you would be. The same holds true for ideas.

One night a couple of summers ago, I was driving through downtown Kansas City trying to find my way home. It was late, and I was with a friend who had a decent sense of direction. I made a suggestion that we take a particular street, and my friend nods in agreement as if to say, "Sure, sounds good to me."

It was not a good route. I became even more confused as to where I was, needless to say where I was going. What was more frustrating was finding out that my friend knew where we were the entire time. Had I been told my intuition was wrong, we could have saved half an hour on our trip home.

In a greater sense, sometimes societies have bad ideas that lead to negative consequences. China is a good example. The result of their government's ideology has lead to a tremendous devaluation of human life. Should those who oppose their lack of human rights be open-minded toward their government's ideology?

It is not good to be open-minded about everything.

Having a sense of what is acceptable and what isn't results in good. When someone comes up with a bad idea and no one challenges the idea, bad things happen. Nurtured ideas do lead to tangible actions. We need to have the guts to call some of these ideas wrong before they develop.

Problems run rampant and begin to surface when people try to tag what is right and what is preference with the same value. If I like green beans, and my roommate believes they are bad, is he wrong? Of course, it is a silly notion to argue this point. But all ideologies are not just preferences, and they are not all equal.

Going to the other end of the spectrum, you can become so closed up that you become ineffective. You need to be teachable. Hopefully, in 10 years you will have a wiser perspective on issues. Learning requires us to measure what we know with what we don't and then change.

If you are conservative and are taunted for being closed-minded — relax. There is no reason to feel ashamed for having knowledge. It is often conservatives, having previously examined an issue and made up their minds, who are taunted by liberals who haven't yet come to a conclusion.

It takes some people longer to contemplate things. If you have been given the ability to assess a situation, make a judgment call and come to an informed understanding of a situation — be glad. You have what those who are trying so hard to be open-minded don't understand.

Don't let anyone make you feel ashamed for having strong ideological beliefs. If you are in the business of learning, and you feel your belief is legitimately challenged, re-examine it. But do not change because of someone's opinion.

Hold it to the what-is-best standard rather than a what-is-popular standard. Having the courage to see past the open-mind mentality is wisdom. True compassion comes when you do what is best for a person, not what is popular.

Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week

Grace Hwang, K-State alumna and member of the Asian-American Legal Defense Fund, speaks of life growing up in an immigrant family. Hwang came to the United States in 1962. Hwang said the Manhattan community helps the local Asian community.

Speaker encourages students to find out more about immigrant families because each story is different

By Lynette Abitz
Kansas State Collegian

Immigrant life, its successes and challenges, including the increase of racially motivated hate crimes, was the focus of a presentation Wednesday by K-State alumna Grace Hwang.

Hwang's talk, presented as part of Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week, concentrated on the successes of immigrant communities and the realities that immigrant families face.

She said she arrived in America from Taiwan with her mother and brother in 1962. Her father had come to Manhattan in 1957 but wasn't allowed to have his family come to America with him because of racial immigration rules.

Manhattan treated Hwang's family well, she said, and in return, all of her family attended K-State.

Just as Hwang's family has a story, she said, so do other immigrant families, and each story is unique.

"I encourage you to find out more about the immigrant families here," she said. "Appreciate their culture, and learn what contributions they have given to the Manhattan community."

Hwang spoke on Asian-American experiences in Manhattan as well as nationally.

She said although the Taiwanese community in Manhattan is small, it is an important group. Taiwanese-Americans have a passionate desire for a free and democratic Taiwan and contribute substantially to human-rights causes. Their willingness to donate for a free and democratic Taiwan makes them willing to donate elsewhere, she said.

Additionally, the Taiwanese have made substantial donations to the International Student Center for renovations and building additions, Hwang said.

Hwang said one way Manhattan has helped the Asian community is by adopting Chinese baby girls. She said many Kansans are providing homes for the one million girls who are left in orphanages because of the Chinese one-child rule. The immigration office in Kansas City, Mo., receives many international children each day whose parents are getting their citizenship papers, she said.

"Americans really are the most generous people in adopting children," said Hwang, who also said these adoptive parents give their children a world of opportunity.

Hwang cited recent examples of hate crimes encountered by the Asian-American Defense Fund to show the rise in these crimes.

She said an Asian-American in Syracuse, N.Y., was denied service at a Denny's restaurant and then was beaten. In New York City, two Korean deli owners were falsely accused of short-changing their customers, and their apartment was ransacked while they were in jail. Hwang said racially motivated crime against Asians have increased by 32-percent in New York.

The hate crimes tend to increase in times of economic uncertainty, Hwang said.

Nikki Fisher, freshman in business, said the examples of hate crimes were disturbing.

"It shows that we're not really open for change," she said. "I think it's horrible. We should accept everybody."

Education helps people understand the Asian experience, Hwang said. She said many Asian-American students want to be accepted by their peers but feel pressure to do well in school because their parents made many sacrifices for them. This factor can cause students to ridicule them and even become violent, she said.

Manhattan schools have begun a program to help relations between students, Hwang said.

The schools have started a conflict-resolution and media program. The program focuses on getting students to empathize with each other, and Hwang said the community should be aware of this program and support it.

Hwang said the arts is an area apart from school in which Asian-American children can become involved.

"Their participation in arts, music and dance can help them to find their peers," she said.

International student undergraduate enrollment up 25 percent

By Lynette Abitz
Kansas State Collegian

K-State's international student enrollment is on the rise. The Office of International Programs said the level of undergraduate international students has increased 25.4 percent, and the graduate level has increased 4.7 percent. K-State is working to improve recruitment efforts and to keep those numbers up. A task force on international recruitment completed a report last year that listed problems with current recruitment strategies and how these problems can be solved.

Enid Cocke, international programs instructor and chairwoman of the committee, said that in the past K-State has done little recruitment as a collective institution.

Camille Consolvo, assistant dean of the Graduate School and part of the task force, said trips to recruit international students were made last year to Indonesia, Malaysia, Korea, Singapore, Hong Kong and the United Arab Emirates.

She also said the graduate office receives an average of 50 to 100 hits for information each day on its Web page.

Although the trips get the information out, Consolvo said, they are expensive. She said it would be more feasible to have international alumni get the word out in their countries.

Cocke said helpful measures could include more mailings, get catalogs to U.S. information agencies, keep working on Web pages to make them accessible and do more traveling abroad.

The international student population is important to the development of students at K-State, Cocke said.

"We are so isolated in Kansas that it's terribly important to have this international dimension on campus," she said. "I think you're handicapped if you graduate without knowing people in other cultures."

Donna Davis, director of the International Student Center, also said the international dimension is important to students.

"So many of our students come from limited backgrounds," Davis said. "This is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to expand their own horizons.

"If we want to be a university in a true sense of the word, we need to be international."

Snyder's leadership ideas make way into print

By MIKE VIETTI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Susan Scott, associate dean of student life, attended the high school leadership conference at K-State last February, she said she did not expect to leave with a book idea.

After all, the featured speaker at the conference was K-State football coach Bill Snyder. All he would talk about is how to win football games and how to be a leader in the world of sports.

Or would he?

Snyder dispelled any possible stereotypes Scott had about football coaches that day. With Snyder's insight concerning leadership, Scott was able to co-author a book with Robert Shoop, professor of educational administration and leadership, titled "Leadership Lessons From Bill Snyder."

"The book is basically written for anyone interested in going from where they are to some goal," Shoop said.

"It's an inspiring story about what a person can do if they make a commitment and make specific steps to their goal."

The book is based on Snyder's set of 20 leadership lessons. The lessons range from attaining goals to making decisions.

The book is divided into six chapters, each containing a lesson pertaining to the title of the chapter. Commentary from a theological perspective written by Shoop and Scott follows each of Snyder's lessons.

"What Susan and I wanted to do was take the idea of leadership theory, as well as take conversations with Coach Snyder, and put them together in a way that would be very user-friendly," Shoop said.

Within the book are numerous examples of Snyder's former associates who have altered their lives directly because of Snyder's influence. Some of the individuals included are former players Kevin Lockett and Brooks Barta, as well as current WildcatSports Network announcer Greg Sharpe and Athletics Director Max Urick.

During the interview process, Scott said neither she nor Shoop encountered anyone who had anything derogatory to say about Snyder.

She said she thoroughly enjoyed working with Snyder.

"I was intimidated at first, but once you sit down and talk with him, he makes you feel quite comfortable."

Scott and Shoop approached Snyder with the idea of writing a book with the hope that it could be used as a classroom teaching tool.

"What convinced Coach Snyder to be involved with the project is that he is really committed to the students of Kansas State," Shoop said.

"When he learned that the book would be used as a textbook in the undergraduate program, that's when he made the commitment."

Both Scott and Shoop teach a two-credit course under the Leadership Studies minor program called Introduction to Leadership Concepts. Students, as well as Scott and Shoop, said the book's place within the classroom is well deserved.

"As a student, you can use the different processes to gain success in both the classroom and in the future," said Melissa Schamber, freshman in open option and a student in Scott's leadership course.

"The book is really accurate with what anyone should do, with respect to setting goals."

Scott said her students enjoyed the book.

"I had a student approach me after class one day," Scott said.

"She told me she had begun to read the book with a plan to highlight everything she found important. She said that she ended up highlighting everything in the book, instead of just bits and pieces."

Both Scott and Shoop said they felt that any person striving to become more of a leader could do just that by following the simple steps laid out by Snyder.

"Leadership is an issue that is confusing for many people," Shoop said.

"Everyone has the potential to lead, and leadership can be taught."

"Leadership Lessons From Bill Snyder" can be purchased in bookstores throughout the state.

Indians win controversial Game 2, 4-1

By RONALD BLUM
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The umpires botched the call, Chuck Knoblauch blew his cool and the Cleveland Indians escaped Yankee Stadium with a split.

After 11 innings of excruciatingly intense baseball, Game 2 of the AL championship series turned on a bizarre bunt play in the 12th inning Wednesday.

Umpires failed to call Travis Fryman out for interfering with Tino Martinez's throw as he ran inside the line on his bunt attempt, and Enrique Wilson broke a 1-all tie by scoring all the way from first base as Knoblauch stood at the bag pointing and arguing, instead of picking up the ball.

Kenny Lofton followed with a two-run single, and the Indians beat New York 4-1, evening the AL championship series at one game apiece.

"I started out inside the line and when I knew I could get by Tino, I tried to straighten out a little bit," Fryman said.

It was a play that will surely be debated, much like J.C. Martin's controversial bunt that won Game 4 of the 1969 World Series for the New York Mets against Baltimore.

"It was so blatant. I don't know what to say. It was a terrible call," Yankees manager Joe Torre said. "There was no line ever touched."

Forget about domination, and put revenge on hold — plays like this can turn a series around.

Martinez threw to Knoblauch, the second baseman who was covering the first-base bag, and the ball hit Fryman, who was clearly running in fair territory, in the back.

Baseball rules require that a runner be on the foul side of the line for the final 45 feet to first base, but it is up to the umpire's judgment whether a runner interferes with the play.

MAKINGS of a RIVALRY

There's no love lost between the K-State and Colorado football teams

By JOHN BERGGREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Saturday's football matchup between 5-0 Colorado and 4-0 K-State has all the implications of a rivalry.

Over the last five years, the Wildcats and the Buffaloes have left a bit of a legacy for constantly turning out down-to-the-wire games. Though the Buffaloes lead the all-time series 39-13-1, K-State is 1-3-1 in the last five meetings.

The tie, as one might remember, came in 1993 when the Wildcats faced the Buffaloes at home, breaking a nine-year losing skid against Colorado.

In 1994 K-State lost in Boulder by the count of 35-21 and again the Wildcats lost a thriller in the closing minutes of its contest in 1995, 27-17.

After trailing 17-13 in the fourth quarter in '95, then-Colorado quarterback John Hessler mounted one of the best comebacks of his career to crush New Year's Day bowl aspirations for K-State. With little more than two minutes left in the game, Hessler engineered an 80-yard scoring drive to regain the lead 20-13. Then the score was blown out of proportion when Matt Miller was sacked in the end zone for a touchdown in the game's final seconds.

1996 unfolded as another thriller. With more New Year's Day bowl implications on the line, K-State's offense was stagnant under then-quarterback Brian Kavanagh, and the Cats lost 12-0. K-State's lone scoring threat in that game came when Kavanagh was sacked on a fourth-down situation on the Buffaloes' 7-yard line in the third quarter.

1997 told a different story, however, with K-State coming out on top 37-20. The Wildcats caused two turnovers in the second quarter and led at halftime 27-6 to cruise to victory.

That game hasn't left the minds of the Buffaloes or the Wildcats.

"They are going to be very upset and motivated to beat Kansas State this year," receiver Darnell McDonald said.

Senior linebacker Travis Ochs said, "They don't like us very much, and we're coming down to their area, and there's a lot of fire right there. They want to beat us bad, we want to beat them bad."

K-State hasn't won at Folsom Field for 25 years. The last time was a 17-14 victory in 1973. That stigma doesn't bother McDonald, though.

"We just look at this year, and we're trying to stay undefeated," McDonald said. "What happened a few years ago doesn't make any difference now. We're just trying to win every game and hope we get a shot at the national championship.

"What it really boils down to is us beating them last year. If we beat them once, we should be able to do it again. We should be able to put together a great game on the confidence that we beat them last year."

JEFF COOPER/KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State fans bring the goal post down after last season's 37-20 victory over Colorado at KSU Stadium. The Wildcats play Colorado in Boulder on Saturday. K-State hasn't won at Folsom Field in 25 years.

STEVE HEBERT/KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State wide receiver Darnell McDonald stiff-arms Northern Illinois cornerback Duane Hawthorne during the Sept. 12th game at KSU Stadium. "They are going to be very upset and motivated to beat Kansas State this year," McDonald said of this week's game against Colorado.

Thank goodness K-State football isn't like all that political garbage going on in Washington, D.C.

I caught a glimpse of some of the Congressional proceedings just before the start of the Randy Moss Coming-Out Party on Monday night. Let me tell you, the last time I saw that many idiots, I was on the campus of some university in Lawrence. I take that back — I've been in Norman, Okla., more recently than I've been in Larry-town.

Anyway, could you imagine if K-State football was like politics?

- Nebraska fans would have the power to try to fire Bill Snyder.
- Old, fat alumni from other schools could get on the K-State team if they bought enough commercials.
- If a player cheated on his girlfriend and didn't want her to know, he would get kicked off the team.
- Assistant coaches, trying to get one of their friends the head-coaching job, could spend $50 million from K-State's budget to dig up dirt on Snyder, questioning his every move while he was the head coach at Foothill High School in California.
- If two-thirds of the players in the huddle didn't like offensive coordinator Ron Hudson's play call, they could override it.
- K-State would put more emphasis on the passing game — if it were in the best interests of the tobacco industry.
- Players would spend more time trying to paralyze opponents and less time trying to help the team win.

There's a reason I don't keep up on current events.

You think that thing with President Clinton is a big deal? Here's something that will have even more of an effect on your daily life: my weekly picks.

Here is why: You can make a difference. If this is the first time you've picked up a Thursday Collegian this semester, allow me to break the news.

Every week, I go head-to-head with a guest picker. I'm trying to prove that I know a little something about football, because I've made some pretty good mistakes in the past. If you want to be a guest picker, all you have to do is send me an e-mail.

So far this season, I'm 3-2 against my guests.

Overall, I'm 32-20 picking games. My guests are 28-24. I started off well, winning the first three weeks. Then I lost to a woman. Then I lost to a man.

I need a win like the Chiefs need a running back. Still, I'm stepping it up and taking on some tough competition this week. My guest opponent this week is Michael Ryan, who does stats for the WildcatSports Network. He's good. He knows his stuff. When it comes to football and numbers, he's the man.

But I'm going to embarrass him worse than Sun Dee Mills embarrassed me right here in my column two weeks ago.

Speaking of Mills and the horrible defeat she handed me, I will even my mark against women next week. I know that's not necessarily something to brag about, but I'm going head-to-head with another woman next week, and I will beat her. Period.

I will not lose again. I will beat her, and I will beat her soundly. I will disappoint my mother, a feminist. It will be my first step toward a lifetime of atonement. Fellow males, please allow me the opportunity to redeem myself.

Of course, if I get beat by a woman again, it will be good practice. Once I get married next May, it's all over. I will lose every day for the rest of my life. Enough about me, though.

Let's talk about you. These are the games you could have picked if you were my guest picker.

1. K-State -17 at Colorado. I'll be in the press box this Saturday, and I've never covered a K-State loss. This won't be the first.
My pick: K-State to cover. Guest pick: K-State to cover.

2. Indiana +10 at Michigan State. If you're a college football fan, you need to watch Hoosier quarterback Antwaan Randle El at least once. This is my upset of the week. I think the Hoosiers will take the game outright. Go ahead and flood my e-mail inbox when the Spartans win by 35. My pick: Indiana to cover. Guest pick: Michigan State to cover.

3. Missouri -8 at Iowa State. The Cyclones won't win a whole lot of games this year, but they'll keep a lot of them close. My pick: Iowa State to cover. Guest pick: Missouri to cover.

4. Notre Dame +3.5 at Arizona State. I hate Notre Dame, but I'd love to see the Irish win just to bring down the Pac-10. Repeat after me: Death to the Bruins. Death to the ... My pick: Notre Dame to cover. Guest pick: Arizona State to cover.

5. Tennessee +3 at Georgia. The Vols are the worst 4-0 team in the nation, Jamal Lewis is out for the season and watching Tee Martin run is the funniest thing since Lucy and Ricky. My pick: Georgia to cover. Guest pick: Georgia to cover.

6. Texas -8 at Oklahoma. How many yards do you think Ricky Williams will rush for to pad his stats? I'm guessing 310. Throw in five scores as well. My pick: Texas to cover. Guest pick: Texas to cover.

7. Kansas +6 at Baylor. Death to the Hawks. The end. My pick: Baylor to cover. Guest pick: Kansas to cover.

8. Cincinnati +43 at Syracuse. It's bounce-back week. Not only for the 'Cuse, but for Donovan McNabb as well. Without big numbers against Cincy, his Heisman hopes will be merely a memory. My pick: Syracuse to cover. Guest pick: Syracuse to cover.

9. LSU +12.5 at Florida. I don't have any doubts about the Gators winning. I don't have any doubts about them winning by fewer than 12, either. My pick: LSU to cover. Guest pick: LSU to cover.

10. UCLA -4 at Arizona. It's time for this cute little UCLA streak to end and for all their beat writers to stop barking. My pick: Arizona to cover. Guest pick: Arizona to cover.

Think one of us is wrong? Want to be a guest picker? Need psychic advice? Need a bad pick-up line? Drop me an e-mail.

Antigone(bottom), played by Vanessa L. Vaughn, and the Nurse, played by Brenda Stanton, rehearse a scene from the play Antigone Wednesday night in Nichols Theatre in Nichols Hall. Antigone runs October 8-10 and 14-17 at 8 p.m. in Nichols Theater.

■ Adaptation of greek tragedy to take the stage.

BY DIANA LEE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State Theater will bring the third installment of the epic Oedipus trilogy to the stage in its presentation of "Antigone," which will be presented tonight through Saturday and Oct. 14-17 at 8 p.m. in Nichols Theatre.

Charlotte MacFarland, associate professor of speech, communications, theater and dance, is directing the production.

She said they are presenting the Jean Anouilh adaptation of Sophocles' original tragedy, which was written more than 2,000 years ago.

"Anouilh's 'Antigone' was written and produced in Paris in 1943," she said. "At that time, Paris was under German occupation, and Anouilh thus had to get his play past the German censor before it could be performed in the presence of the German state police."

MacFarland said Anouilh wanted to make an important impression on the French people.

"Anouilh wanted to send a message to the French people to resist the German 'New Order,' which promised them economic prosperity at the expense of their souls," she said.

Anouilh used the battle between the characters of Antigone and Creon to represent the clash between the French people and the German government.

Marci Maullar, associate professor of speech, communications, theater and dance, said Anouilh used subtlety to transmit his message to the French, yet never making the underlying theme obvious to the Germans.

"His point was really that Antigone, the one who ascribes to a higher good, is the person you should admire instead of Creon," she said.

Maullar said Dana Pinkston, assistant professor of theater, had an important hand in the production.

"She did both the set and the costumes, which is called synography, and kept it all centered around white, black and gray," Maullar said.

Although these choices might seem random, Pinkston used her color choices in the costumes and sets to further the theme, Maullar said.

"Most of us live in the gray place, where we never have to make a stand, but Anouilh was saying it is important for us to make a stand, not just live in the gray," Maullar said.

Maullar said the cast and MacFarland will have a talk-back session immediately after tonight's performance.

"For anyone who wants to stick around, there will be the opportunity for any audience members who have questions to address them to the cast and to Charlotte, just a question-and-answer session," Maullar said.

Architecture exhibit displays fusion of man, nature

BY RUSSELL FORTMEYER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Art Review

Dan Kiley could very well be considered the Forrest Gump of landscape architects.

Not that he's some kind of idiot savant but because he's been involved in about every significant urban park scheme in the United States in the past 50 years. His work, or at least photographs of his work, is in Seaton Hall's Chang Gallery until Friday.

Most of the photographs are instantly recognizable, be it a series of fountains set against the Arc de Triumphe in Paris or a sinuous landscape spread beneath the Jefferson Memorial Arch in St. Louis.

Geometric forms figure prominently in Kiley's work, owing to the architect's belief in getting more from plants by keeping them orderly and efficiently arranged.

In the show's accompanying essay, Kiley writes, "In landscape architecture projects of all scales the objective is the integration of man and nature into one." In another paragraph, he writes, "not man and nature but man as nature."

Kiley's résumé reads like a canonical history of urban landscape design. He's responsible for the Independence Mall in Philadelphia, a daring urban mall that cleared out buildings to give a historic quarter the breathing room it needed.

In New York, Kiley designed the atrium garden of architect Kevin Roche's landmark Ford Foundation building. More recently, he laid out the master-plan gardens for the Getty Center in Los Angeles.

Having accomplished so much professionally, Kiley has won numerous awards, including the American Institute of Architect's Gold Medal Award and the 1997 National Medal of Art.

Seeing Kiley's work, even in photographs, makes one give pause to consider the outdoor environment of this campus. Perhaps there lay in this show a few concepts this campus could do well to integrate.

Architect sees need for increased collaboration

■ New York architect gives students career advice.

BY RUSSELL FORTMEYER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Speaking to a full house of architecture students Wednesday at the Union Little Theatre, architect James Biber called for an increased collaboration within the field to achieve more creative results.

Biber, who was on campus delivering the 1998 Oscar Ekdahl Memorial Lecture, is a principal with Pentagram Architecture in New York. Biber's firm is an American arm of the original Pentagram, founded in 1972 in London. His lecture was titled "Why Can't We All Just Get Along: 25 Years of Collaboration at Pentagram."

"Collaboration is the best possible attitude to have," Biber said. "If you're lucky, it's the client you're collaborating with. It's a much better attitude than creating a set of drawings and pushing it to someone to make."

"IF YOU'RE LUCKY, IT'S THE CLIENT YOU'RE COLLABORATING WITH. IT'S A MUCH BETTER ATTITUDE THAN CREATING A SET OF DRAWINGS AND PUSHING IT TO SOMEONE TO MAKE."

-JAMES BIBER, ARCHITECT

To illustrate Pentagram's process, Biber provided examples of Pentagram's multi-disciplinary work — work that has earned the firm awards and recognition.

For Swatch's flagship store in New York, Pentagram created a store alive with motion. The street facade is a large glass window revealing three floors of shopping options. Inside, glass pneumatic tubes carry watches throughout the store to counters where customers can peruse the merchandise.

"Nothing really defines time like motion," he said. "It gives the store a kinetic sense."

Many of Pentagram's projects are defined by small infusions of dramatic color — like bar stools in primary and secondary colors or mismatched kitchen cabinets that look like a funky collage.

The firm made a splash in Florida with its design of the visitor's center for the planned community Celebration. The town is being built by the Walt Disney Company. Pentagram's design consists of two flat houses that are basically theatrical billboards that mimic the actual homes that could be built in the community. However, inside the doors, the center provides information for potential homeowners.

"It's really the notion of something that appears to be real but isn't quite," Biber said. "It's more a facade — a flat, billboard house to scale. You get a sense of what the town would be like from an artist's view."

The project was so successful, the center remains and has been converted to a day care.

Pentagram specializes in offering a variety of services, such as architecture and graphic design. The London firm was founded by three graphic designers, one architect and one industrial designer. Its New York office, founded by Biber in 1991, creates designs varying from restaurants to marketing logos to upscale residences.

In 1997, the firm designed the exhibition "The Psychedelic Era 1965-1969" for Cleveland's Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame and Museum.

Biber, who was educated at Cornell University, has taught at Cornell, Syracuse University and Parsons School of Design.

Historic restaurant might have to relocate soon

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BROOKVILLE, Kan. — The Brookville Hotel draws diners from miles away with its renowned family-style chicken dinners.

A restaurant has been operating in Brookville since the town, 15 miles southwest of Salina, was founded in 1870. The same family has owned it almost as long.

But owner Mark Martin is considering selling the hotel and opening a restaurant in another town.

His problem, he says, is sewage. The restaurant has so many customers that its septic-tank system is inadequate. Brookville, with fewer than 300 residents, has no wastewater-treatment plant.

"It's purely a business decision," Martin told the Salina Journal. "I cannot foresee us operating the business with a line of 'Johnny-on-the-spots.' "

Martin, 48, bought the business from his mother in 1982. His grandmother's parents bought the business in the late 1800s, and it was passed down from generation to generation like a patchwork quilt.

In 1991, the Brookville Hotel installed a new $50,000 septic tank to handle its wastewater. But the restaurant, which now has 47 employees, is filling the tank too quickly.

Martin has to have the tank pumped every week and dumps the waste on farmland south of Brookville, something that costs $400 each time. He estimates that he spends $2,000 a month getting rid of the sewage.

"But this is an expense, not a long-term investment, that is simply not acceptable," he said.

Martin wants to build a lagoon system where the wastewater would be pumped into a pond and be allowed to evaporate. It's a system that many small towns use, but he can't find the required 3-4 acres of land.

Landowners to the east and west have turned him down, and the owner to the south has offered only a one-year lease. Martin said he hadn't contacted owners to the north yet.

The town is hoping to build its own wastewater-treatment plant, but the project would be an expensive one for a town of Brookville's size.

It has applied for a state grant to replace its 30-year-old water lines. Brookville will have to put up $100,000 and borrow another $100,000 just for that project, even if it gets the grant.

Depending on how that project goes, Brookville then would apply to the state for a grant that would allow the city to build a $1.5 million wastewater-treatment plant, Mayor Ralph Johnson said.

Johnson said Martin hasn't met with the city council to discuss the sewage troubles.

Martin said he is giving himself eight months to buy land and have plans for a wastewater lagoon approved by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment. He said he will move the business and sell the hotel if that doesn't happen.

He and his wife, Connie, don't want to move the business out of Brookville, but he said possible moves could be to Abilene, McPherson or Kansas City — or even out of state.

"I still intend to make my living in the restaurant business," he said. "We're at that critical junction that will determine the future of this business."

AIDS

most. Overall, 16,685 Americans died of AIDS last year, or about 46 each day. Just two years earlier, it was 118 per day.

Two years ago, John West was retiring from his job, finalizing his will and arranging for the right disco music at his memorial service.

He took what he thought was a final trip to his beloved Paris to say goodbye to friends.

"I made my plans to die," said the San Francisco man, who contracted HIV in the epidemic's early days and has seen 300 friends and a lover die of AIDS since then.

Then the new drugs, called protease inhibitors, came along.

"Within six months, I was feeling absolutely wonderful," West, now 49, said. "If people would look at me, they would have no idea I have a terminal disease."

He's teaching at a local university, raising money for AIDS services and working on a master's degree in public health.

The news from other nations is much worse: In Africa, home to 90 percent of AIDS deaths, there is little money for basic medical care; the AIDS drugs cost more than $10,000 per year, per person. In some areas, one in four adults has the virus that causes AIDS.

In part because of the good news here, government officials and activists said they worry Americans will stop seeing the disease as a deadly killer and take fewer precautions against infection.

"They hear about the good results and say, 'Well this isn't as much of a problem as it used to be,'" said Dr. Anthony S. Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases.

Fauci said better access to care and more aggressive treatments contributed to the drop, but he gives most credit to the new drugs. At least 150,000 Americans now are using the powerful protease inhibitors first made available in December 1995.

However, the drugs aren't a simple solution.

In addition to their cost, they are tough to take. West takes 48 pills a day, and the drugs have left him with an odd side effect, a buffalo hump on his upper back that pushed his neck from a size 15 to a 24.

Other side effects include diarrhea, insomnia and stomach pains. The pills must be taken on a strict timetable — some with food, some on an empty stomach.

Missing just a few doses allows resistant viruses to explode. A new, recently approved regimen could cut the number of pills to five a day for some patients, but not all.

Using the drugs properly is even harder for drug users and people living in poverty.

Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala said she is most concerned about drug users, among whom the HIV is spreading fastest.

"We need to get them off the streets and pull them into other kinds of services," Shalala said.

It's hard to convince drug addicts that seeing a doctor and taking medicine are most important, said Ravinia Hayes-Cozier, who leads a group of AIDS service providers in New York City.

"If they're due at a certain place at a certain time and that conflicts with them getting their drugs, the drugs are going to play a higher role in their life," she said.

The protease inhibitors might not work forever. Fearing that people might develop a resistance to them, scientists are working feverishly on other drugs to fight AIDS.

"We may just be seeing a postponement of death," said Dr. Helene Gayle of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

"We want to be sure people understand these are not cures."

Greenspan says market slide bound to hurt U.S. growth

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Offering hope of further interest-rate cuts, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan said on Wednesday that a "fear-induced psychological response" gripping the world's financial markets is bound to cramp the U.S. economy.

"We are clearly facing a set of forces that should be damping demand going forward," Greenspan said. "We do not know how far it will go, or how much it will affect consumer and business spending here at home."

But he told a group of business economists: "This is a time for monetary policy to be especially alert."

His comments almost interrupted a string of stock-market losses that have occurred this week as the annual meetings of the International Monetary Fund failed to produce a clear strategy to combat the crisis.

The Dow Jones average of industrial stocks shot up 113 points immediately after his speech, then settled back and closed at 7,740, down three points.

"He all but said, 'We very likely are going to lower rates again,'" said economist Allen Sinai of Primark Economic Associates in New York. "And interest rates — always — are more important than words. They're very important for the pocketbooks of billions of people on this planet."

In an effort to support borrowing and spending, Federal Reserve policy-makers last week cut the benchmark interest rate on overnight loans between banks by a quarter of a percentage point. They meet again Nov. 19.

"Between now and next spring, I wouldn't be surprised to see three more cuts," said economist Sung Won Sohn of Norwest Corp. in Minneapolis.

Last week's Fed action came a month after the collapse of the Russian ruble, which triggered what Greenspan called a "quantum shift" in market sentiment marked by plunging stock prices and a worldwide flight from risky investments.

"It has been a fairly dramatic, broad and as yet seemingly incomplete adjustment," he said.

"This thing hasn't come to an end yet."

He attributed some of the shift to "a positive, conscious, calculated adjustment" in response to changing risks. But some of the desire for liquid — that is, easily bought and sold — investments is "a fear-induced psychological response" to rising uncertainty, he said.

"When you're crossing the street, and you're uncertain as to whether a car is coming, you stop. You disengage," he said.

GUNS

parents appeal.

Both the Topeka and Holton school districts have adopted "zero tolerance" policies on guns in schools in recent years. Holton is 26 miles north of Topeka.

In the Holton incident, a student told the middle school's principal that the boy, whom police said was 13 or 14 years old, had brought the gun to school.

The principal and Holton Superintendent Jerry Fuqua searched the student's locker and found the unloaded .380-caliber handgun in a book bag. No ammunition was found in there or in the boy's gym locker.

School officials called Holton police and the boy's parents to school before questioning him. The boy, who told authorities he had found the gun in his parents' bedroom and brought it to show some friends, had displayed it to about five students, Fuqua said.

"He was not angry, and there were no threats made," Fuqua said. "At no time were the students at the middle school threatened."

The boy has been suspended for five days pending a hearing on his case. Fuqua said he expects the hearing to be held by Monday.

Fuqua said he has been wrestling with whether a student who brings an unloaded gun to school for show and tell deserves the same punishment as a student who brings a loaded weapon to school with the intent of causing injury.

Fuqua also said all students were told about the weapons policy. Parents also have been notified repeatedly in district newsletters and other mailings.

"The student was old enough to know better, and he knew we had a zero-tolerance policy," Fuqua said. "He apparently decided he wanted to show the gun bad enough to risk the consequences."

In the Topeka case, school officials said they did not know how the boy obtained the gun. It had been reported stolen after a 1995 burglary of a Topeka business in which several other guns were stolen.

The boy reported he found the pistol after his uncle baby-sat him the night before he brought the gun to school. The child told school officials he took the pistol to school to show it to his friends.

House votes to impeach President

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The House triggered an open-ended impeachment inquiry against President Clinton on Thursday in a momentous vote cast in the shadow of mid-term elections. Thirty-one Democrats joined majority Republicans in increasing the peril for the embattled chief executive.

CLINTON

The 258-176 vote opened the way for nationally televised impeachment hearings later this year, with possible witnesses ranging from Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr to Monica Lewinsky, Linda Tripp and others in the sex-and-cover-up drama that has commanded the nation's attention for nine months.

Clinton, the nation's 42nd president, becomes the third occupant of his office to face serious impeachment prospects. Andrew Johnson was impeached by the House in 1868 but remained in office after the Senate fell one vote shy of forcing his removal. Richard Nixon resigned in 1974 rather than face impeachment over Watergate.

"I do not think that we want to settle for less than the whole truth," said Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., the man at the controls of the inquiry. To the nation watching on television — as well as to openly skeptical Democrats sitting across the aisle in the House chamber — he pledged fairness in the months ahead.

"Too much hangs in the balance for us not to rise above partisan politics," the Judiciary Committee chairman said.

House Democrats argued in vain for an inquiry limited to Starr's evidence to be wrapped up by Dec. 31.

"We're all profoundly hurt by what the president has done," said Democratic leader Richard Gephardt of Missouri. "But this investigation must be ended fairly and quickly. It has hurt our nation, and it's hurt our children. We must not compound the hurt."

The visitors gallery was packed during the debate. Underscoring the gravity of the moment, Speaker Newt Gingrich presided throughout. And when one Democrat, Rep. David Obey of Wisconsin, scanned the House chamber and saw many empty seats, he grabbed the microphone to urge that absent lawmakers drop whatever they were doing and "get their tails here."

There was plenty of partisanship on display.

When Rep. William Delahunt, D-Mass., complained that the committee had earlier released thousands of pages of Starr's material that "none of us had read," Hyde pounced.

He said that during the days before the material was released, Republican members of the Judiciary Committee had spent 114

Student, faculty opinions on impeachment differ

K-State students and faculty had varying opinions Thursday after the House voted to open an impeachment inquiry against President Clinton.

Justin Smith, freshman in computer science, said he doesn't see a president but rather one big scandal.

"It has gotten to the point where I don't look at him being president. It's all just a scandal," Smith said. "If the president is impeached, it will be a good thing. Even though it is his fault, it is taking up time he could be making more important decisions."

Joey Podrebarac, freshman in construction science, said it's an embarrassment to the country.

"It should never have started in the first place. They started talking about something they had no business talking about, let alone bringing it in front of the entire country," Podrebarac said.

John Fliter, assistant professor of political science, said Thursday's event was historic because it is only the third time Congress has had impeachment inquiries. Fliter said procedures on Capitol Hill so far have been similar to Watergate in the 1970s.

Andy Gabbert, sophomore in landscape architecture, said Clinton should be impeached because the office of president needs to be upheld. Politicians need to understand the American people will not tolerate deception, he said.

Fliter said a person's bias gives them a slanted look on the process.

"If a person really doesn't like the president or thinks he is doing a good job, it gives them a colored view of the whole process," he said.

Meshell Barker, freshman at Manhattan Christian College, said he thought it's tough to make that judgment.

"It is hard to decide what to do in situations like this, because who are we to judge?" she said.

Fliter said censure — a formal reprimand of the president and his conduct — is still a possibility.

Kris Boll, freshman in accounting, said she thought Clinton should have told the truth in the first place.

"It has gotten to the point where I am sick of hearing about it, and it is time to get him out and start fresh," Boll said.

The Rose Hill Dance Troupe of Oklahoma City performed traditional American Indian songs and dances in the Union Little Theatre on Thursday as part of K-State's Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week celebration.

The performance included various types of American Indian dance, performed by Josh Williamson of the Sac and Fox tribe and Green Peace Chief Clan.

"When I dance, I try to have a good time and feel good about it," he said.

Williamson also explained how the traditional costumes worn by the dancers were made and the symbolism and spiritualism depicted by the eagle feathers and porcupine hairs adorning them.

He said each feather represents a veteran and deserves the utmost respect.

"Each feather represents a warrior from Vietnam, World War I or World War II," he said. "All these things we use and carry. We have to respect them."

Ronald Barker, also a member of the Rose Hill Dance Troupe, sang and played the drums throughout the performance.

Williamson said the drum beat represents Mother Earth and sounds like a heartbeat. He said the songs performed were "the real thing."

Barker said he enjoyed traveling with the group and performing and educating the audience about American Indian songs and dances.

"It makes you feel good. There's a spirit in everyone, it brings it out," he said.

The presentation also required a great deal of crowd participation. Numerous volunteers from the audience made their way to the stage to participate in a traditional dance.

Special dance performances also were made by Tammy Goodson, president of Native American Student Body, and her daughter Christina, 6, from Northview Elementary school.

Between performances, Williamson, who is working on a degree in sociology at Langston University, spoke on the importance of racial harmony, education and how the two intertwine.

"There has been a chain reaction against a lot of groups," he said. "But when it comes down to it, we all have to live in harmony in nature. I want to encourage everybody to do the best they can and seize every opportunity."

Williamson will be the director for the Native American Student Body Pow Wow benefit next month. The powwow will conclude Native American Awareness Week at K-State on Nov. 7

An American Indian Day forum also will be at noon Monday in Union 212.

"BUT WHEN IT COMES DOWN TO IT, WE ALL HAVE TO LIVE IN HARMONY IN NATURE."

Charges dropped in hazing incident

MIKE WATSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Charges won't be filed in connection with an April hazing incident that injured a K-State alumnus, Riley County Attorney Bill Kennedy said Thursday.

Ernest L. Harris Jr., a December 1997 graduate, sustained back and kidney injuries after he was beaten on April 18 in an apparent hazing ritual at the home of a member of Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity. Harris has since recovered and now lives in Olathe, Kan., the fraternity was suspended indefinitely the week following the incident.

Kennedy said he had reviewed police reports on the incident but wouldn't release any information.

"When I received the police reports, I reviewed them to see if there was a crime committed," Kennedy said, adding he couldn't disclose any information from the reports due to legal aspects.

Veryl Switzer, former Kappa Alpha Psi chapter adviser, could not be reached for comment.

Harris' father, Ernest Harris Sr., said after the beating that his son's injuries seemed to be caused by a severe beating or lashing with a paddle. Harris Jr. was hospitalized for several days after the incident in the intensive care unit of the University of Kansas Medical Center.

Associate Dean of Student Life Carla Jones said the fraternity's suspension still stands, even though the university has no control over the criminal aspect of the case.

"When we have an incident that happens off campus, we don't have any say on how the case proceeds," Jones said. "The decision of the suspension was done by the campus, and that still stands."

Kappa Alpha Psi had four members last year and was one of K-State's traditionally black fraternities, falling under the supervision of National Pan-Hellenic Council and not Interfraternity Council.

Greek Affairs adviser Barb Robel said the difference in jurisdiction doesn't change perceptions of fraternities and sororities.

"In the eyes of the general public, all greek letters are the same. They are hard to distinguish," Robel said. "Any incident involving greek letters impacts them all concerning public image."

Korri Hall, junior in pre-professional elementary education and a member of Alpha Kappa Alpha, a sorority governed by National Pan-Hellenic Council, said the incident has hurt the image of other groups in the system as well.

"We don't want stuff like this put on us because of another organization," Hall said. "That's how people look at us now, and that's not what we're all about."

Hall said the AKAs are continuing community service work and awareness efforts to distance themselves from the hazing incident.

Other Kappa Alpha Psi chapters also were connected to hazing incidents last year at Southeast Missouri State University and Maryland-Eastern Shore.

OSAS budget increase approved to fund salaries, UAB handbook

BY JAIMIE HARTTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Office of Student Activities and Services will get more student money for the next three years.

Student Senate passed a 2.1-percent budget increase for the next three years on a vote of 44-3. The additional money will come from a 21 cents per-credit-hour increase in student activity fees.

This was revised from an earlier proposed increase of 4.5 percent, which would have added an extra $9,039 to the current budget of $201,033 per year. Under the new increase, the budget will only increase to $205,259.

The extra money will fund salary increases for the full-time and graduate assistant workers in the OSAS office as well as printing a University Activities Board advisory handbook. The 62-page handbook will be printed and distributed to campus groups registered with UAB for each of the next three years. At the end of the three years, distribution will decrease to every other year.

Gayle Spencer, coordinator of student activities, said the new fee increase will help maintain OSAS services for K-State students. The increase will help keep people in the office to answer questions when students walk in.

"The OSAS office, because of the name and location, has a lot of traffic. On a daily basis there will be 10 to 20 calls per hour, and at least three to five people coming in to ask questions," Spencer said. "These people are usually confused and don't know where they are going. We help direct them."

Carlton Getz, Student Government Association treasurer, said he agreed an increase was needed.

"This is the most strained budget in the university," he said.

Getz said the UAB handbook is necessary because it will help divert some of the problems student groups have.

Barbara Dethloff, arts and sciences senator, said during the privilege fee committee meeting Sunday she disagreed with the fee increase. She said the budget should continue as it is now.

"I think people in our office could do more of the job ourselves, instead of spending more money," she said.

Artist gives ceramic, pottery lectures today

Internationally renowned artist Ken Ferguson will be giving free workshops and demonstrations this weekend for interested local artists.

Ferguson, best known for his work with clay pottery, will be on campus today and Saturday, courtesy of the Arts and Sciences Fund. Ferguson, who is in his early 70s, has had many experiences in the world of art.

Workshops will run from 10 a.m. until noon and from 2:30 p.m. to 4 p.m. today in West Stadium, leaving Ferguson time for a 1:30 lecture at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. Saturday's workshops will be from 9 a.m. to noon and from 1:30 to 4 p.m.

"He is well-known around the world, and his demonstrations would be helpful," said Yoshiro Ikeda, professor of art. "He has received many awards over the years."

Ferguson, formerly a department head at the Kansas City Art Institute, retired last year after more than 20 years of teaching. He is the recipient of such honors as the Governor's Award for Outstanding Artist and has traveled as far as Japan to demonstrate his skill.

Ferguson has a display in the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art in Kansas City, Mo., and will be opening a new exhibit tonight in a downtown Kansas City museum.

Students suspended for handgun in school

OSKALOOSA, Kan. — Two students have been suspended pending hearings after an unloaded handgun was found Tuesday on Oskaloosa High School property.

The incident remains under investigation, said Jefferson County Sheriff's Det. Randy Carreno on Thursday.

A 14-year-old student, believed to have hidden the gun near the school, and another student believed to be involved have been suspended, Carreno said. Neither were identified.

Two other students reportedly told school officials about the gun, and the sheriff's office was called.

The .38-caliber semiautomatic handgun was never in the high school, Sheriff Roy Dunnaway said, and students were not in any danger. The weapon had an ammunition clip and one round of ammunition hidden with it, but Dunnaway said the clip and bullet were not designed for the gun.

Dunnaway said one of the suspended students told him he brought it to show friends. The second boy might have supplied the weapon, which Dunnaway said didn't come from the home of either boy and might have been stolen.

The handgun was found hidden under a railroad tie on a track that divides school property and a city park, Carreno said.

It definitely was on school property, Carreno said.

Under state law, it is illegal to bring guns or other explosive devices onto school property.

School officials have authority under the law to suspend students who bring guns to school for up to 186 days — an entire school year.

It is the third incident in northeast Kansas in the past two weeks in which students brought handguns to school.

A 5-year-old Topeka kindergarten student was suspended for a year and placed in the school district's alternative school after bringing a loaded gun to class Sept. 22. That weapon discharged in a clothes closet when the boy brushed against it, but no one was injured.

A Holton middle school student also faces a possible yearlong suspension after bringing an unloaded semiautomatic pistol to school to show to his friends Oct. 6.

Board plans meeting at community college

TOPEKA — The Kansas Board of Regents will meet for the first time on the campus of a community college when it convenes Nov. 18-19 at Seward County Community College in Liberal.

The board always has met in Topeka or on the campus of one of the universities it oversees. It will meet, for instance, Oct. 14-15 at Emporia State University.

Regents Chairman Bill Docking said in a statement issued through the regents' office that the board had accepted an invitation from Seward County President James Grote. He said it would enable the regents to "gain a perspective and sense of the community college as an institution.

"The six regents universities and the state's 19 community colleges together offer students an array of educational opportunities," Docking said. "This is an excellent opportunity to continue an open discussion about our mutual interests and to build upon our alliances."

Presidents of the 19 community colleges, the six state universities and Washburn University submitted to a governor's task force last week a plan they have agreed upon for creating a coordinating state agency for higher education. Docking said at that time the regents could accept much of the plan.

The task force is expected to recommend a plan for restructuring higher education in Kansas to Gov. Bill Graves next month.

Study blames ads for rise in teen smoking

ATLANTA — The number of American youths taking up smoking as a daily habit jumped 73 percent between Joe Camel's debut in 1988 and 1996, the government said Thursday.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said tobacco ads that rely heavily on giveaways and teen-friendly cartoons are partly to blame.

More than 1.2 million Americans under the age of 18 started smoking daily in 1996, up from 708,000 in 1988, the CDC estimated.

The rate at which teens became smokers also increased, climbing 50 percent. In 1996, 77 of every 1,000 non-smoking teens picked up the habit. In 1988, the rate was 51 per 1,000.

"It's terrible news," said Dr. Gary Giovino, chief epidemiologist for the CDC's Office on Smoking and Health. "There's a lot of important things to consider, which include the increase in tobacco ads that have a youth focus. The appearance of tobacco smoking in the media has just skyrocketed lately."

The Tobacco Institute and R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., the cigarette maker that introduced Joe Camel, had no immediate comment. The tobacco industry has insisted it does not target teen-agers with its advertising.

The study was based on surveys of 78,330 Americans ages 12 to 66 conducted by the CDC between 1994 and 1997. Researchers extrapolated nationwide estimates from that sample.

Those interviewed were asked if they ever had a daily smoking habit, and, if so, when they started. They were also asked at what age they took their first puff.

In calculations back to 1965, the CDC estimated that the rate for beginning smokers peaked in 1977, when 67 of every 1,000 potential smokers developed a habit. The lowest rate — 44 per 1,000 — was in 1983.

Daily smoking rates began increasing steadily again in 1988, the same year R.J. Reynolds introduced Joe Camel in its advertising for Camel cigarettes, the CDC said.

"After Joe Camel was introduced, then the promotional-type strategies kicked in, rewarding smokers with coupons and trinkets that encouraged them to buy more cigarettes," Giovino said. "A lot of parents weren't aware of Camel cash and that stuff, but kids were."

Joe Camel was retired last year, after critics including President Clinton said the character was a blatant example of cigarette marketing aimed at children.

The CDC said its survey mirrored previous studies that estimated more than 3,000 Americans under 18 become habitual smokers each day. The agency also estimates 32 percent of smokers will die from smoking-related illnesses.

Cost of patrol car upkeep expected to rise

By TIM RICHARDSON
Kansas State Collegian

The cost of keeping the Riley County Police Department on the street is expected to increase to more than $600,000 next year. Maintaining current resources is a large part of the budget.

Riley County, which owns the RCPD facilities, is responsible by law for maintenance. Costs incurred by the department are passed on to the county in a report each month. The county then pays the bill. Maintenance and repair on RCPD's vehicles alone will cost nearly $50,000 this year.

RCPD has 45 cars. Captain Dana Kyle said there are typically 12 cars patrolling Manhattan at any given time, with peak times between 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. and 9 p.m. to midnight.

The constant patrolling wears hard on the cars.

Patrol cars are kept for two years for a maximum of 100,000 miles in Manhattan. Cars patrolling the county are kept usually for three years.

"City driving certainly doesn't help them," Kyle said.

Another big expense is gas. The cost of fueling the department's vehicles for a year is about $75,000. Kyle said a new car costs about $20,000, with some specialty vehicles costing about $23,000.

Since the cars are replaced regularly, most of the maintenance costs to RCPD come in the second year.

"A lot of them are under warranty for the first year," Kyle said.

Even so, officers get used to each car's particular quirks and personality.

RCPD Sergeant Jay Mills said police officers usually drive the same car each day. If a patrol car is being repaired or having maintenance work done, an officer will take a different car.

"They like to be assigned to the same unit each day and learn the rattles and bangs of each car," he said.

Police cars are replaced frequently so the rattles and bangs don't interfere with police work.

Pat Howe, state and local sales manager at Ford Motor Co. in Detroit, said Ford sold about 55,000 police vehicles last year. He said a patrol car costs about $20,000, which is slightly less expensive than a normal vehicle.

The reason for the lower price is that patrol cars come less equipped, but the cars are made to withstand more adverse conditions.

"The vehicles, in some cases, virtually run 24 hours a day," he said. "If they are used in persistent application, they don't stay between the yellow lines."

Patrol vehicles are equipped with heavy duty alternators, heavy duty batteries, a cooling package and a unique rear end for accelerated speed, among other differences.

"It's an unrestricted engine," he said. "It's not speed-limited at the top end like a normal car would be."

RCPD cars are purchased and repaired by the lowest bidder, which Kyle said in recent years has been Dick Edwards Ford Lincoln.

Steve Lindsey, service adviser at Dick Edwards, said maintenance work for patrol cars is important because of the manner in which the cars are used.

"It's called upon more because of the severity of usage," he said.

Driving conditions also cause more problems for police cars, he said.

Lindsey said a driver normally would slow down for bumps, but a police officer does not have the same opportunity.

"When the bad guy's running, they have to catch him," he said.

After an RCPD vehicle reaches 100,000 miles, it is traded in on the purchase of another vehicle. Lindsey said the cars are then taken to Chicago, where they are used as taxi cabs.

He said police and emergency vehicles brought in for repair are put on emergency status, so they can be put back out on the streets quickly.

"When a police car comes in, it has priority," he said. "We get it done and kick it back out," he said.

Lindsey said although the cars are taken off the street after reaching 100,000 miles, some of the cars would still be able to be used as patrol vehicles. By selling the cars at a certain mileage, it keeps the vehicles reliable.

"It's a judgment call," Lindsey said. "Do you want to take that chance with a 100,000-mile plus unit chasing a bad guy?"

Future engineers to attend KSU convention

By KELLY EVENSON
Kansas State Collegian

Future engineers from across the United States will be in Manhattan this weekend for the annual Tau Beta Pi National Convention. This is the first time the convention will take place at K-State.

Tau Beta Pi is an honor society that encompasses all fields in engineering. The organization recognizes scholastic achievement in the engineering field while also doing community-service projects.

Scott Coatney, editor of the newsletter for K-State's chapter of Tau Beta Pi, said 470 members will be attending from all over the country, from states such as Massachusetts, Arizona, California and Minnesota.

The convention began with business meetings Thursday afternoon and will conclude Saturday. K-State's chapter has been planning the event since last year.

"THIS GIVES EVERYONE A GOOD CHANCE TO LOOK AT K-STATE."

— Scott Coatney Tau Beta Pi

Seven Tau Beta Pi members were sent to the national convention in fall 1997 in Minneapolis, Minn., to be trained and to see how the convention works.

So far, the convention has received good reviews from some national officers of Tau Beta Pi in the areas of participation of the host chapter. Also, souvenirs are being given out to those who attend, said Brian Budke, arrangements chair for the convention.

"We got funding from corporate sponsors, so we got to do a lot more with our souvenirs than other host chapters have done," Budke said.

Activities during the convention include a tour of the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area and a volleyball tournament, as well as the usual business and district meetings throughout the weekend.

There is also an Engineering Futures meeting, which teaches management and team-leadership skills.

Coatney said being host to the convention is not only helpful to the chapters but also to the campus and the state.

"This gives everyone a good chance to look at K-State. It is the first impression that most people will get of the campus and of Kansas, and we want them to walk away with a good feeling," he said.

Cease-fire declared by Albanian rebels in Kosovo

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Ethnic Albanian rebels fighting for independence for the Serbian province of Kosovo declared a unilateral cease-fire Thursday, putting more pressure on Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic to end his crackdown.

Tensions between Milosevic and the United States, which is pressing for NATO airstrikes against Serb-led troops, intensified as Secretary of State Madeleine Albright said Thursday that time was running out for the Yugoslav president to comply with U.N. demands. Albright said a united NATO will back airstrikes.

About 20 carloads of U.S., British and Australian embassy staff members headed out of Belgrade as a safety measure, even as a U.S. envoy returned for more talks with Milosevic.

A statement distributed by the Kosovo Liberation Army in Kosovo's capital, Pristina, said the rebel command has decided to refrain from all military activity starting Friday.

Kosovo is a southern province of Serbia, the main republic in Yugoslavia. About 90 percent of Kosovo's 2 million inhabitants are ethnic Albanians, and most favor independence.

Although the KLA has been driven from all but a few scattered areas, the announcement is politically significant. Milosevic launched his crackdown Feb. 28 after attacks by KLA rebels against police and soldiers in the majority Albanian province.

He has insisted he needs to maintain a military and police presence in the area to guard against further KLA attacks.

In the statement, the KLA said its guerrillas would defend themselves if attacked. The rebels demanded international monitoring of the cease-fire.

Despite international pressure and NATO threats, Milosevic has refused to declare a cease-fire openly, even though there has been no significant fighting in Kosovo during the past week.

He said he considers the Kosovo rebels "terrorists and bandits," and any cease-fire on his part would legitimize them as a negotiating partner, one of his associates said on condition of anonymity.

The United States said Milosevic has not complied with U.N. Security Council demands for a cease-fire, the partial withdrawal of his troops and the return of refugees to their villages.

In Brussels, Belgium, U.S. envoy Richard Holbrooke briefed Albright and NATO officials on the results of his three rounds of talks with Milosevic this week.

Albright told Holbrooke to return to Belgrade for more talks, amid signs of opposition within NATO to an attack without further diplomatic efforts.

Albright said Holbrooke would be delivering a message that the time for a diplomatic settlement in Kosovo was all but gone. She demanded full compliance with U.N. resolutions to end the crackdown and said half-measures would not be enough.

If Milosevic doesn't comply with the U.N. resolution, "he will be responsible for the consequences, and they will be grave," said British Foreign Secretary Robin Cook after meeting with foreign ministers.

At the White House on Thursday, President Clinton said the United States would vote to authorize military strikes against Serbia if Milosevic continues to defy the international community.

"In the days ahead, my counterparts in Europe will be making similar decisions," the president said.

Milosevic spokesman Ivica Dacic said Thursday that threats of NATO strikes were a "rapist act."

Stock market falls for second day; world investors continue to fight

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The high-flying U.S. dollar plunged dramatically for a second-straight day, taking many U.S. stocks down as well Thursday. The world's economic troubles hit closer to home despite international officials' best efforts to prove they are fighting back.

The dollar suffered its biggest two-day drop against the Japanese yen in 25 years, as panic selling swept the world's $1.5 trillion-a-day currency markets. The freefall was blamed in part on hedge funds, the once-obscure investments favored by the wealthy.

Hedge funds have been dumping dollars in recent days on a belief it will weaken further as prospects for the U.S. economy darken. The dollar is now worth nearly 20-percent less versus the Japanese yen than at its August peak.

The turmoil in currency markets also spilled into stocks. The Dow Jones industrial average fell 274 points before largely recovering in afternoon trading. However, broader market indicators stayed lower.

Even before the dollar's decline, investors were upset that weeklong talks in Washington on the global economic system had produced no significant new plan.

Michel Camdessus, head of the 182-nation International Monetary Fund, and James Wolfensohn, head of the World Bank, took exception to the market's belief that the sessions had dissolved into wrangling over the proper approach.

"Everyone agrees there is a way out of the crisis. It is an uphill way, but it is there," Camdessus said.

The two agencies are moving aggressively forward on a program to make themselves more open, to improve banking regulation worldwide and to provide billions in assistance to damaged countries, Camdessus and Wolfensohn said.

In a victory for the Clinton administration, the IMF announced it was near agreement on loans to support Brazil, the latest country to fall victim to a rush by panicked investors.

Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin had worked behind the scenes this week to gather support for Brazil. The package is expected to total around $30 billion.

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan said Wednesday that a "fear-induced psychological response" griped the world's markets after the shock of Russia's default on debt in August. Greenspan said U.S. monetary authorities would be "especially alert" to the need for action, a comment the markets read as promising further rate cuts on the heels of last week's quarter-point cut.

However, the prospect of further Fed rate cuts also helped spur the dollar's selloff. Lower U.S. rates, while spurring borrowing in this country, make dollar-denominated assets less attractive to overseas investors.

If foreign investors start dumping their U.S. holdings, that could accelerate the slide in U.S. stocks, already 17 percent below their July peak. That in turn could cause market-set U.S. interest rates to rise, offsetting the economic momentum the Fed had hoped to provide by lowering the cost of the short-term rates it controls.

A weaker dollar also will raise U.S. inflation pressures by making imports more expensive.

On the other hand, the weaker dollar against the yen will help lift Japan's economy and relieve pressure on other Asian nations to devalue.

"The big drop in the value of the dollar is a good news, bad news story," said David Wyss, chief global economist at Standard & Poor's DRI.

Harmony week offers students opportunities

Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week has finished its 10th anniversary a smashing success.

Whether you were interested in life as part of an immigrant family or you wanted to hear about racism and class inequality, there was something for everyone. Every major and minor, every activity and organization, every race and ethnicity had an opportunity to participate.

It seemed as though there was more going on, as if this year's Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week provided more activities for students to participate in than it had in past years. We were given a tremendous opportunity to learn about other cultures, other backgrounds and other lives that we might not have had experience with because of the limits of our own development.

The K-State environment is not necessarily saturated with people of different ethnicities. We are host to a variety of backgrounds, but the multicultural status of this campus is not yet overwhelming. We are by no means dominated by any ethnicity other than Caucasian — that is the stark reality we must deal with. As a result, many of us have missed out on the opportunity to become more multiculturally aware.

Sometimes it's tough to take the steps necessary on this campus to broaden your horizons. Few have the gumption to attend meetings of different ethnic groups without any reason other than multicultural exposure. Few would attend talks or discussions on multicultural issues without the motivation of a teacher. Few feel confident enough to walk up to people of a different race in the Union Stateroom and begin a conversation on the basis of those differences.

Sometimes it's hard to find appropriate reasons to take those steps. Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week allows many to celebrate multiculturalism without feeling intimidated by stepping too far from their comfort zone.

Keep in mind there are always other means of expanding your cultural viewpoint. Speakers will come throughout the year, and opportunities will arise for you to expand your horizons. All it requires is for you to keep an ear to the ground.

We need to learn from Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week, and we need to remember what we learn. Our microcosm is growing in diversity, enrollment for international students has jumped 25 percent, and Sunday is Coming Out Day for K-State's gay, lesbian and bisexual population.

Learn.

TRICK OR TREAT

It might be early, but start preparing now

VIEWPOINT

MICHAEL NEFF

It's finally October, K-Staters! Anybody know what that means? I'm talking football, Oktoberfest, football, the World Series, football and Mike's all-time favorite holiday. Nope, not Columbus Day, but that's close!

Ladies and gentlemen, it's time to start prepping for Halloween!

The whole Halloween concept is ingenious. That's why everyone loves it. You dress up in a cheesy, stupid-looking costume (I'm going as Bill Clinton, with my pants dropped around my ankles), and if you're young enough, you go door to door begging complete strangers for candy. If you are one of the unfortunate ancients in society and can't trick or treat, you get to dress up in a cheesy, stupid-looking costume and party! One question: Have you ever gone bobbing for apples in a bathtub full of beer? I recommend it; it's therapeutic. Woo-hoo!

Now, partying on Halloween is great, but my favorite part of Halloween has got to be the process of handing out candy. Not being a big fan of candy, I tend to be a touch healthier. No, I'm not one of those bastards who hands out apples. Nope, I'm too cheap — you should have seen some of the looks I got one year when I handed out macaroni and cheese. Kids these days are so unappreciative. I even took the time to cook it for them. This year, I think I'll whip up a few gallons of ramen noodles. They're easier to clean off the side of the house.

Why don't I hand out candy, you ask? Call it revenge on the society that raised me. I remember way back in the 1980s when I was a dainty 11 years old and dressed up like my boyhood hero, Vanilla Ice. On Halloween, I'd scour the streets of that bustling metropolis, Ogden, Kan., in search of a house, any house, with its porch light on. I think there were four.

Three of them were handing out pennies. If I had the technology, I probably would have fire-bombed their houses instead of just egging them.

Somewhere, there must be a law against handing out pennies on Halloween. I think I'll get in touch with Jim Ryun and see what I can do about getting a bill written.

Halloween isn't all fun and games; people can and do get hurt, especially if you're stupid.

To ensure a safe holiday, here are a few helpful tips for you trick-or-treaters who dare to knock on my door:

1. No, no, no, no, NO! I've seen Hanson costumes, yes I have. I swear I will whip out my trusty cattle prod and zap to death the first person who shows up on my doorstep dressed up like an 8-year-old she-male. Natural selection at its finest. Darwin would be proud.

2. Don't throw the ramen noodles in my yard. Save them for my neighbor's yard. It's much bigger.

3. The K-State-KU massacre also is taking place on Halloween, so remember where you live. Anybody I see dressed up like a KU basketball player will be ankle-tackled, strung by said ankles in a tree in my front yard, and will be pelted with steaming hot, chicken-flavored ramen noodles. Only a quarter a toss for everybody strolling by.

4. Please, please, please, wear a costume! I don't buy that, "I'm dressed up like a college student" story. I have a garden hose, and I'm not afraid to use it.

5. My house isn't going to be decorated like a haunted house, so when you see my roommate chasing someone down the street and revving a chainsaw, it's probably real. Get out of the way. Quick.

Let's learn something we can actually use after college

VIEWPOINT

TODD PACEY

Core, schmore. I ain't buying it.

In high school, when students complained about the relevance of the information attempted to be thrust into their brain, teachers would say it was to prepare them for college.

In college, when students have the same complaint, they are told the information will be used at the next level.

What if there is not another level?

I don't know exactly how the other colleges work, but there is at least some similarity to the curricula required by the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications. Regardless of what you aspire to do for a living, you have to know something about math, science and history, also known as more of the same pointless information to which you have been subject for 12 years.

How many of us really are going to need to know the inner workings of a fetal pig? Have you ever wanted to know what the trajectory of the computer was when you pushed it off the desk? As my acquaintances Bobby and Steven from the University of Kansas asked, where the hell do they get these @#*!ing imaginary numbers?

Not only is it irrelevant, the last one doesn't even exist.

Therefore, I am charging you, Jon Wefald, university president, to develop a curriculum where students actually will learn things that they will use in their lives. You know, just some average courses that, although they might not be difficult, will provide many valuable learning experiences.

Government 101: In my Public Affairs Reporting class, we recently have had the pleasure of hearing numerous speakers in the political realm, including the mayor of Manhattan. They talked on various subjects, but there was one common thread: People know little about government and what it can do.

Do you even know the mayor's name? I just learned Steve Hall's name this semester.

This course will teach students not only the inner workings of local, state and federal governments, but also their rights as citizens. Granted, there is way too much subject matter to cover, but if you pique the students' interest, they will learn on their own, or take a class at the next level.

That class will be called "Beating-the-System 102."

Domestic Science 101: Back in high school, students had the option of taking home economics. You remember, the easy-A class where you cooked, sewed, gossiped and flirted. The problem with the class is that high schoolers don't realize the gravity of this subject while they are still living at home.

How many pillows do you really need to make?

The focus of this course simply will be on home life. There still will be some sewing and cooking, but repair work and maintenance will take the place of flirting and gossiping. This still might be an easy-A class, but once again that is not the focus. Students will be taught how to fix common household problems, like what to do when the toaster explodes.

Automotive 101: After my most recent bout with the beast that gets me around, I finally have admitted defeat. I know absolutely nothing about cars. All I know is to fill 'er up and to change the oil. I think there are many people out there in the same boat, car, whatever.

Like Government 101, this class will help to eradicate an ignorance that a large number of Americans share. The class will focus on how to maintain a car properly from birth to death, hopefully prolonging the time between the two. The focus will not be on knowing every single part, but rather common problems and how to detect or fix them.

Now listen, I know these courses might sound a little odd, but look at what classes students are taking.

You choose: the fetal pig, or the car; the force of explosion, or fixing the toaster. I know enough about government to know that you cannot change the curriculum yourself, Wefald, but you can put in a good word to the Kansas Board of Regents for me, won't ya?

Sackett's column promotes attitude of male domination

Editor,

It is opinions such as Sam Sackett's "Decent Man of the '90s has clear, basic role in society" that sadly promote chauvinistic attitudes of domination and absolute control in opposite-sex relationships. Sackett's biased and emotionally based points, without factual evidence, allow readers to conclude he has not been involved in a relationship of merit.

Relationships are not hierarchical. They are circular, and each partner brings strengths to the union. To state one is superior physically, emotionally, mentally and spiritually is ignorant and immature. Man was not made for woman, nor woman created for man. We are equal entities entitled to carry out individual and collective responsibilities.

Physical prowess is irrelevant in a relationship. For centuries, many farm wives have worked alongside their spouses. American Indian women were responsible for preparing food and shelter, ranging from cutting buffalo to sewing clothing. As police officers, firefighters and pilots, 1990s women are working side by side with male counterparts, similar to their ancestral mothers.

To suggest women are emotionally unstable compared to men is contradictory to history. The most stable societies, such as the Hopi, were matriarchally based. In addition, various studies have proven men, in fact, become more stable, responsible and have a higher quality of life when in a solid relationship.

Logically speaking, women have just as much mental capability and capacity as men. Margaret Thatcher and Indira Ghandi are prime examples of intelligent women who led their respective countries through difficult times. Achievements were based on logic and emotion, not one or the other.

Additionally, it has been proven that behind every successful man is an equally successful woman. Ivana Trump, Elizabeth Dole and Hillary Rodham Clinton are three controversial contemporaries who have been instrumental in their husbands' successes financially, politically and socially.

Local communities should not be shocked by Abilene incident

VIEWPOINT

MELISSA DIVINE

It has happened again. Another "tragedy," another "random act of violence." We are left shaking our heads, wringing our hands and wondering why.

In Abilene, Kan., a man murders his family and then — perhaps realizing the horror of his own actions or fearing the legal ramifications of those actions — takes his own life as well. Soon there will be the inevitable investigation, the social post-mortem, the evaluation of motives, the bemused groping for answers. This incident will be viewed as a horrible, unpredictable event that brought chaos to an otherwise orderly social landscape: an anomaly, a freak of nature.

The slaughter on Oct. 1 was none of these things. The slaughter was the — dare I say logical? — conclusion to domestic violence.

There are, however, questions to be asked, questions that beg attention and have yet to be addressed. The questions that might provide real insight, those that actually might serve to enact change, go like this: why has this happened AGAIN?

Why, when every year 6 million women are battered by their partners, are we still amazed when one of them ends up dead from the abuse? Why are we still more obsessed with dissecting the victim's motives for staying, rather than holding the perpetrator accountable for his actions? Why, whenever such violence becomes horrific enough to finally warrant headlines, do we act as though we've never seen it before?

The Oct. 1 incident was close to home, but we have plenty of our own incidents right here at home: On Valentine's Day, 1997, a woman responded to her estranged mate's request to talk and was summarily executed by him upon her arrival at their former home; on April, 1997, the K-State campus became a public war zone as a "despondent" ex-boyfriend stalked his ex-girlfriend to her sorority, bringing along a shotgun to convince her just how much he loved her; or, much more recently, a Manhattan man was charged with two accounts of attempted murder after trying to blow his estranged wife and daughter away with an assault weapon.

I know, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that every community in Kansas, every community in this country, has such stories. Therefore, we really have no right to be shocked or amazed. We've been here before. What is amazing, however, is our stubborn unwillingness to change, to do anything that truly would make such occurrences "random acts of violence."

I'm not talking about doing anything as trendy or ineffective as collectively acknowledging "we just live in such a violent society," installing v-chips or even wearing ribbons and buttons declaring our allegiance to a cause. I'm talking about and unflinching personal inventory. I'm talking about an honest, brutally honest, examination of our own motives and our own actions that cause incidents like these to occur.

You see, we are all complicit in carnage of Oct. 1. Our unwillingness to know, our unwillingness to act, our unwillingness to change creates the blank canvas that stands ready to be decorated with the blood of terrorized women and children.

Every October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month. The horrible irony that the Abilene incident happened on Oct. 1 should not be missed. This year, make a personal commitment to become aware. Find out just how many women and children are victimized every year by men who say they love them. Stop asking questions like "Why doesn't she just leave?" and start asking questions like "Why doesn't he just stop?" If you are selected for jury duty on a domestic violence case, do not fall victim to "He just loved her so much" rhetoric. Use your voting power to support legislation that will give women economic equality and justice.

Choose to avoid victim blaming. Give — heavily — to your local domestic violence shelter. Most women can free themselves and their children from violence. Be an active part of changing those material conditions.

At the same time you take these political actions, make changes in your personal life. Use the power of social censure, of social ostracism, against men who are violent to women or who engage in sexist or discriminatory thought and practice. Refuse to view violence against women as sexy. Refuse to laugh at wife-beater jokes — in fact, express your displeasure with such attempts at humor. Be willing to ask hard questions of your friends and your family, questions like, "Are you safe at home?" and then be willing to face the truth when you hear it.

Believe a woman when she describes the terror of her home, even when you consider the man to be a really nice guy. Teach your sons and your daughters to be both strong and gentle. Perhaps most importantly, refuse to live one more day in ignorance — make sure next year's Domestic Violence Awareness Month finds you completely aware. Refuse to be baffled when the next slaughter happens. Help keep it from happening in the first place.

Club sports forced off field

Editor,

The ongoing construction on Anderson Avenue in front of Memorial Stadium has been a thorn in the sides of many K-State students.

This has opened a Pandora's box of problems. It means an extra five to 10 minutes of commuting time and it is just an eyesore. But, to some of the K-State athletic clubs, it has brought them to an exodus that other students, stuck in the narrow confines of their lives, fail to see.

Since construction began, four athletic clubs have been waiting for a permanent practice field. The lacrosse team, men and women's Rugby Club and the Ultimate Frisbee Club all have felt frustration due to both apathy and rejection from the political ranks at K-State.

While the precious greek and intramural teams clutter up the Chester A. Peters Recreation Complex fields, the true athletic clubs are forced to look elsewhere for a decent place to practice. Clubs that are sponsored by the university have been shafted by "Rec Complex politics." Even when the fields are open, K-State athletic clubs are prohibited to practice on them.

The K-State Rugby Club, along with other athletic clubs, is practicing on a piece of land between Bramlage's east parking lot and the parking lot west of the Rec Complex. This piece of land is affectionately known as the Slab for two reasons. First, the Slab is filled with chunks of asphalt, concrete and fragments of broken beer bottles. Also, the rock-infested ground is covered with weeds and crabgrass. After a single practice, a rugger's body looks like a slab of meat.

The athletic clubs agree there must be something done about this situation. It is impossible for a sponsored organization to thrive under such conditions.

The only way we ever will be viewed as a serious club is to have a permanent place to practice. After all the heart and dedication that goes into these clubs for K-State, it is sickening to see the lack of support given by that same banner under which we compete.

Until the administration finds a solution to this savage injustice, we will be busy either finding other venues at which to practice or will be busy pulling out the chunks of asphalt and broken glass from the field on which we sweat, tackle and bleed for nothing more than the honor of K-State and the pride in knowing we gave our all on the field of play.

Student upset with parking

Editor,

I was just wondering why Hall Governing Board parking is never full around the residence halls, yet, a student who pays close to $2000 or more for a room per semester also must pay an additional $60 for parking — which logically could be included in the room fee — they can't even find! If I were living in an apartment complex, the parking would be provided for free.

Wichita State University doesn't charge its students for parking permits that allow them to park almost anywhere on campus, excluding a couple of specified staff lots. Maybe if they handed ticket officers a trash bag, they actually could earn their wages instead of standing next to the 15-minute stalls, watching their watches, when they saw you pull in 5 minutes ago.

I would like to suggest that all residence hall and inner campus lots be available to on-campus residents. I can't drive to visit my friends over in the Kramer Dining Complex because I would get ticketed for parking in that lot. I paid for the right to park, and I can't even find it.

BUFFALO BUSTERS

Cats confident against No. 14 Colorado team

BY SAM FELSENFELD
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Week five, game one.

K-State's football team (4-0, 1-0 in Big 12 Conference play) has been on the field this season. But for the first time this season, the Wildcats might need to play well to win when they play at No. 14 Colorado tomorrow at 6 p.m.

The Buffaloes are the Cat's first ranked opponent, and at 5-0 (2-0 in Big 12 play), they've already matched their win total from last season.

"They're a good team, they're undefeated. They haven't lost but neither have we," K-State defensive end Joe Bob Clements said. "It's gonna be interesting, because neither one of us wants to lose."

Still, on paper, the Cats have a distinct advantage. Of the 12 main team categories, K-State leads the nation in eight — scoring offense and defense, total and pass-efficiency defense, turnover margin, punt- and kickoff-return average, and net punt average. The Cats also rank sixth in rushing defense.

K-State outscored its first four opponents 249-21, while the Buffs' combined score through five games is 141-82.

"I think we have a lot of confidence going into this weekend," offensive guard Jeremy Martin said. "We're going to eliminate some penalties and move the ball on the ground, and we'll be fine."

Helping the Cats this weekend is running back Frank Murphy, who will make his much-anticipated debut in a K-State uniform. Murphy, a highly touted transfer from Garden City Community College, sat out the first four games of the season after accepting money from athletic boosters to purchase a used car.

In the spring, Murphy wowed coaches and players with his 4.21 40 speed and 42-inch vertical jump. On Saturday, he'll get his chance to show off to the fans. Chances are, he'll be in before the fourth quarter.

"Do we have to get points on the board before Frank would play? The answer is no," K-State coach Bill Snyder said. "Just exactly when — at what point in time would he enter the ball game — I still don't know that. It's just going to be by feel."

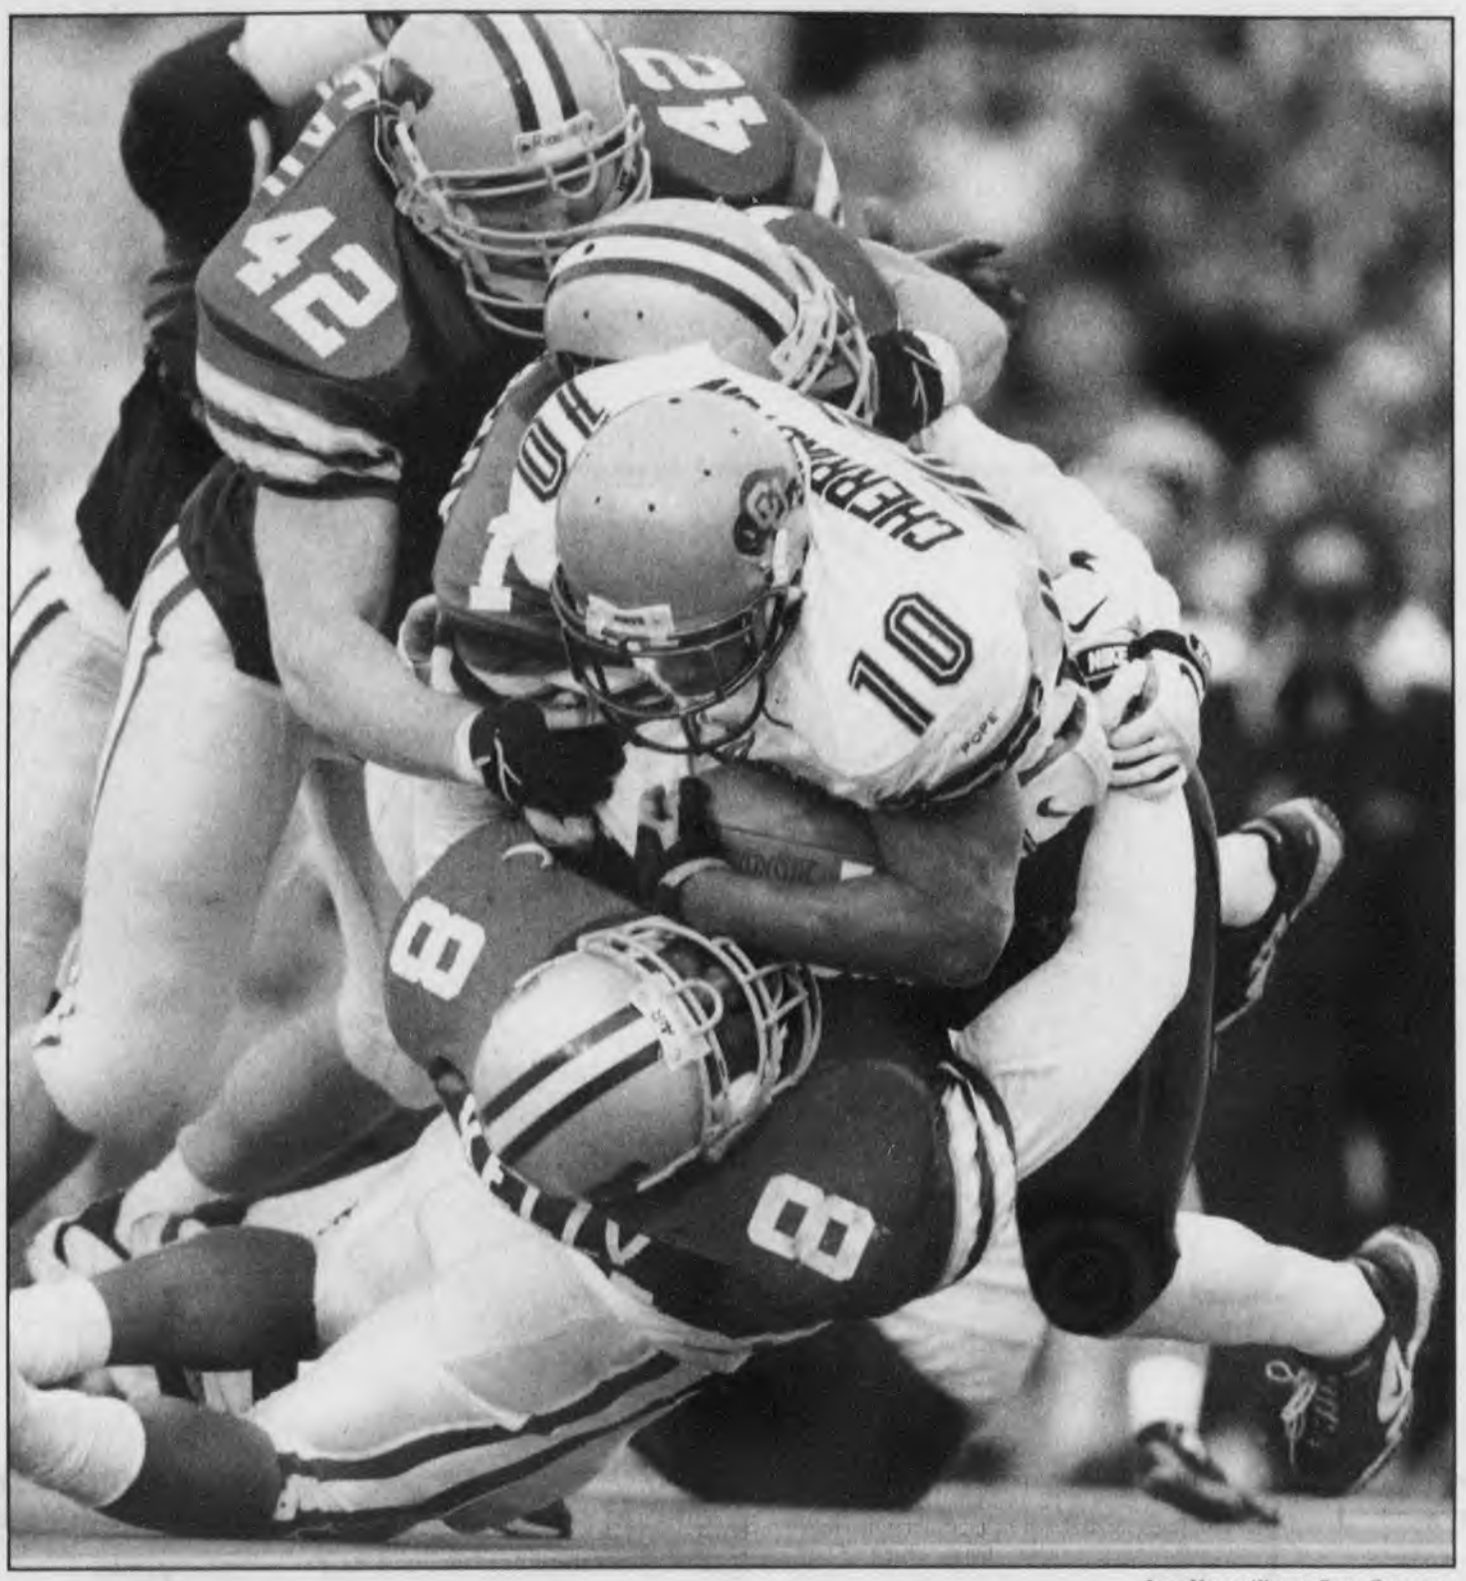
Eric Hickson is listed as the starter at running back on the depth chart followed by Marlon Charles and David Allen. Although Murphy isn't listed, he and Hickson are rotating with the starting unit during practice.

"I think he'll get into the game pretty early," quarterback Michael Bishop said. "I think he'll come out and make big plays for us early. If he does that, I think his confidence will jump up, and then he'll start making plays for us."

Colorado's defense is giving up only 100.8 yards per game on the ground, but Bishop said he doesn't anticipate any problems for Murphy.

"It's gonna be Frank's coming-out day," Bishop said. "He talks about his first carry, what he's gonna do when he gets the ball, and he says he's gonna try to go for six. He said, 'If we get the ball at the 20, I'm going 80.'"

One thing remains certain: Hickson will get the first crack at the Buffs' defense.



"Eric's our No. 1 running back and will remain our No. 1 running back until he does something that indicates that he shouldn't be the No. 1 guy," Snyder said. "I think Eric is playing well right now. I couldn't tell you that I can recall that he's played any better at any particular point in time in his career."

Colorado is doing well stopping the run, giving up only 2.6 yards per carry, and its pass efficiency defense, at 88.5, is eighth-best in the NCAA.

Offensively, Colorado ranks 44th with 28.2 points per game and is led by community college-transfer quarterback Mike Moschetti. At 6 feet, 195 pounds, Moschetti lacks size, but he's been effective as a scrambler.

He's completed more than 56 percent of his passes for 978 yards and nine touchdowns against only a pair of interceptions. He also has the Buffs' longest carry of the season, a

Cats head out on road again, try to regain winning edge

BY BRENT STOVER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State volleyball team has reason to be confident.

Even after suffering a sweep at the hands of Texas and Texas A&M last weekend, the Cats remained at 25 in this week's USA Today/AVCA Coaches' Poll.

This weekend they take on Iowa State and Missouri — two teams with a combined 2-8 record in Big 12 Conference play.

"We need to come out and play strong the whole match," senior Kim Zschau said. "We have to beat teams on a consistent basis, without lags of points that we've had in the past."

Tonight, K-State travels to Ames, Iowa, to take on a Cyclone team that is 2-15 overall and 0-5 in Big 12 action.

Iowa State has been swept 0-3 in all five conference matches, averaging just more than 6 points per game in those contests.

According to Wildcat coach Jim McLaughlin, the Cyclones can't be overlooked.

"You have to be prepared every night," McLaughlin said. "There's no nights off in the conference."

The Cyclones lead the all-time series with K-State, 34-18, but the Cats have won the last four meetings between the two teams.

Iowa State's top player is Nanette Allen, who leads the team with 146 kills and 107 digs.

Saturday night's trip to Columbia, Mo., presents K-State with a step up in competition.

The Tigers enter the match at 10-7 overall and 2-3 in the Big 12.

Missouri is ranked 10th in the AVCA District V volleyball rankings.

"We have to play the K-State way," McLaughlin said. "We have to maximize our strengths and disguise our weaknesses as best we can."

The Tigers are led by Annette Luyten, who averages 3.29 kills, 2.07 digs, and 0.96 blocks per game.

Luyten's counterpart, Renee Rosinski, chips in with 3.15 kills, 1.65 digs, and 0.78 blocks per game.

Missouri leads the all-time series with K-State 25-22, though the Cats have won the last eight meetings.

A ninth-consecutive victory would give the Cats their fifth-longest winning streak over a single opponent in school history.

K-State has not lost a match to Missouri since 1993, and they haven't dropped a single game to the Tigers since 1994.

"They have some senior leadership on their team this year," McLaughlin said. "They have a little more poise and patience."

Tonight's match against Iowa St. begins at 7. The Missouri match Saturday night is set for 7:30.

Twelve men's teams will participate, and one women's exhibition game will be played, featuring K-State against Kansas. The tournament opens with the women's game at 6:30 tonight and lasts through Sunday.

The K-State women's club team, 1-1, lost to KU in its first showdown by a score of 1-0. Club president Amanda Sweeten said the goal scored by the Jayhawks was the result of one mental lapse, and the team should be able to bounce back tonight.

"We've been working on a lot of conditioning, just basic things, going to the ball, passing, controlling the ball," Sweeten said.

The K-State men's club team also goes head-to-head with its sunflower state rival at 8 tonight.

The Cats enter the tournament at 4-2 and hope to take revenge on the Hawks, having lost 4-1 in their previous meeting.

Club president Eric Glover said he expects the winner of this game to win the tournament.

"It's the most intense game of the year, and it's going to be a battle," Glover said. "I think it's going to take everything we have to beat KU. If everybody works hard and does everything they can, we should have a chance," he said.

Oklahoma and Kansas were the winners of last year's Chartrand Tournament. This year, K-State starts its drive as part of the A bracket, which includes Kansas, Nebraska-Omaha and Emporia State.

The Cats enter the tournament with a positive outlook. Player Dan Seimster said this tournament has been a focal point for the team this season.

"I'm pretty confident. I think we've been practicing enough," Seimster said. "We've been focusing on this tournament for a while, and we're hosting it so we need to make a good showing."

The Chartrand Tournament was established in 1979. Sponsor Art Chartrand said the tournament has a number of goals.

"I think it's a matter of keeping two things alive," Chartrand said. "The legacy of my brother, who played soccer in the days before soccer was cool to play, and the legacy of K-State soccer. Through that we hope to develop another legacy, which is Division 1 soccer at K-State and for all Big 12 teams."

K-State is the only Big 12 Conference school without a women's varsity team. The men's team does not face this problem, because not all the Big 12 schools have varsity men's soccer. This makes it easier to find Big 12 club teams to compete against.

The Chartrand Tournament has become a tradition for the men's club in the past 20 years. Chartrand said he has put more than $100,000 into this program over that time period. He also said he would like to expand the tournament, particularly in the area of scholarships.

Chartrand said the number of people playing soccer keeps increasing, and as this continues he would like to help provide opportunities for kids to remain in Kansas to play soccer.

"We're trying to build opportunities for high school soccer players," Chartrand said. "There are outstanding players in Kansas, and a lot of kids would like the opportunity to play at K-State or KU, but right now, they don't. They go to the East or West Coast to play."

The tournament is free and offers an opportunity to witness one of the fastest growing sports in the United States. Club soccer adviser Charles Hedgecock said he expects quality soccer.

"There should be some excellent soccer this weekend, very skilled, very competitive," Hedgecock said. "Some of the greatest soccer in the Midwest for no cost, and it's going on all day long."

Colorado may give Cats more than they want

I get a sick feeling in my stomach as No. 5 K-State travels to No. 14 Colorado this weekend, and I think it comes from the fact that the Wildcats have everything to lose and the Buffaloes have everything to gain.

Coaches hate it when games are drawn up like this. Example: Tom Asbury loves to play Kansas every year because his team only can look good against the top-ranked Jayhawks. The Wildcats usually put up a heck of a fight and sometimes even put themselves in position to win a game.

Though K-State always comes out on the losing end, it makes you wonder this: Why can't the Wildcats play that well against the Texas schools in the Big 12 Conference? If they had that same tenacity in all of their games, they might actually make the NCAA Tournament.

Now, I know you might be saying the K-State football team could have had this "everything to lose" mentality in its first four match-ups of the season, but it didn't. The difference here is that none of those teams actually posed a threat to K-State going undefeated. Colorado, on the other hand, actually does pose a threat.

VIEWPOINT

JOHN BERGGREN

The Buffaloes bring to the table the most-balanced offensive attack that K-State has seen this season, along with a defense that ranks seventh in the nation. Colorado's strength on offense, as it seems to be every year, is its passing game, which should give K-State a scare. The Wildcats have been hit deep six times for passes over 25 yards this season.

This is a game that Colorado has been licking its chops for ever since Nov. 15, 1997. When the Buffaloes headed off Wagner Field after losing to the Cats 37-20, the last image they had was a mass of purple tearing down the goal posts in the north end zone.

A quick look at the Buffaloes' schedule automatically tells you this weekend's match-up is their game of the season. Although Colorado plays Nebraska in its last game of the season on Nov. 27, the Buffs know the game in Lincoln is an automatic defeat.

On the other side of the coin, this is not K-State's game of the season. Everyone is pointing to the Cats' Nov. 14 match-up against you-know-who as not only the game of the year but the game of the century, though K-State knows that if it loses a game en route to that Nov. 14 game, it will have little, if any meaning.

There are other stigmas that have to bother K-State. The Wildcats have not won at Folsom Field since 1973, a feat that the K-State players might not admit to, but the gods of college football have made it that way.

K-State had a chance of ending its winless drought in Boulder in 1996. The Wildcats' usually potent offense, led by Brian Kavanagh that year, went stagnant and didn't even put a point on the board, losing 12-0.

"We look at it as this year, and we're just trying to stay undefeated," receiver Darnell McDonald said. "What happened a few years ago doesn't make any difference now. We're just trying to win every game and hope we get a shot at the national championship."

Admittedly, the Buffaloes have had their share of problems this year, which make you wonder how in in the world they have a No. 14 ranking. Colorado has had close calls three times this season against non-ranked opponents.

The latest of those came last week just barely winning at Oklahoma 27-25. The other two scares came in a pair of home games, the first against Baylor, 18-16; and the second against the WAC's Fresno State, 29-21.

Saturday evening's game should be close for more than the opening minutes of the game. If Colorado hands the game to K-State like it did last year — fumbling the ball twice in the second quarter — then it could turn into a blowout. But if the Buffaloes can play a game without making too many blunders, K-State could be in for a nerve-racking evening.

Yes, I'll pick K-State to win, but take that for what it's worth. As Collegian columnist Sam Felsenfeld has proven in past weeks, we writers are often proven wrong.

Christine Lavin

bringing combination of folk and comedy to BirdHouse Music series

BY CORBIN H. CRABLE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If you haven't heard of Christine Lavin, chances are you will soon.

Lavin, a singer/songwriter/guitarist, is scheduled to perform at 8 p.m. Saturday as part of this season's BirdHouse Acoustic Music Series at the Manhattan Arts Center.

The popularity of Lavin's songs, which incorporate folk music and comedy, grew with the May release of her 10th solo album, "One Wild Night in Concert." Some of the more popular songs from the album include "Don't Make Me Too Happy," "Oh No," and "Flipside of Fame," a song that looks at the misfortune of such famous figures as Pee-wee Herman, Princess Diana and Mike Tyson.

David Kamerer, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, serves on the board of directors for BirdHouse and is in charge of booking shows for the series. When Lavin's name came up, Kamerer said, there was no question in his mind that he had to book her for a performance in Manhattan.

"She's one of the biggest stars we've had," Kamerer said. "Her live shows are just unbelievable. She's the most requested artist we've had. When we had the chance to book her, we jumped at it."

Be it a live show or a recording, Lavin has a comic and musical talent that dazzles audiences.

"She just sparkles," Kamerer said. "She has an infectious way of making you want to laugh, and she's just enchanting."

Lavin's subjects of her more humorous songs usually deal with gender issues, said Kamerer, who described her as "Robin Williams with a guitar, only female," and said both have the ability to act on humor with an amazing spontaneity.

Saturday evening's performance will be in the arts center's Grosh Performance Hall, which seats 150. Kamerer said that he urges those interested in attending to purchase tickets ahead of time, and that he expects the performance to sell out. Tickets, priced at $10 for general admission and $8 for students and seniors, can be purchased at the arts center and at the Dusty Bookshelf in Aggieville. He also said the arts center is very fortunate to have her, considering her schedule and the various locations where she performs.

"Christine Lavin usually performs in larger halls," he said. "She's playing in Lawrence on Friday and Moundridge on Sunday, so we filled that gap in between."

Pianist Rosilee Walker to perform at arts center

BY CORBIN H. CRABLE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

To mark its recent purchase of a new Yamaha C3 grand piano, the Manhattan Arts Center has invited pianist Rosilee Walker to perform this weekend.

She will perform at 7:30 tonight in the center's Grosh Performance Hall.

Walker, a classical pianist who serves as director of keyboard studies at Westark College, a two-year school in Fort Smith, Ark., will perform pieces by Claude Debussy, Frederic Chopin, Ludwig van Beethoven and Franz Liszt, among others. She also will perform trademark piano novelties written during the 1920s.

Walker twice has performed at the home of the governor of Arkansas and performed as a guest pianist at the White House in December 1995.

The art center's new grand piano was bought with the assistance of several donors in the community and Mid-America Piano and Organ in Manhattan.

Galen Wixson, executive director of the arts center, said the purchase of the piano, as well as Walker's current Arts on Tour program, couldn't have come at a better time.

"Her touring coincided with our piano being purchased," Wixson said. "We were really excited at the chance of having her here."

"WE'VE NEVER HAD A CONCERT LIKE THIS BEFORE."

— GALEN WIXSON
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, MANHATTAN ARTS CENTER

While Walker is a classical pianist, Wixson said she brings a unique flair to her music, and that a love for classical music in the Manhattan community is alive and well.

"It's very different music," he said. "There's a real demand in town for classical music."

Wixson said the turnout for tonight's performance will be a factor in booking shows in the future.

"I'm interested to see how the turnout will be to help us with future programming," he said.

The new piano and Walker's unusual style of music will be a first for the arts center, Wixson said.

"This is new territory for us," he said. "We've never had a concert like this

'A Perfect Murder' isn't necessarily so perfect

BY RYAN DOOM
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ever since "Wall Street," Michael Douglas always seems to be portraying a stuck-up, lonely millionaire. In his latest thriller, "A Perfect Murder," he doesn't cover any new ground.

Movie Review

Douglas is a rich New York stockbroker who just has been informed that he's losing his fortune as a result of bad investments. On top of that, his wife (Gwyneth Paltrow) is having an affair with an artist, played by Viggo Mortensen.

Once Douglas learns of the affair, he cooks up a plan to pay his wife's lover $500,000 to murder her so he can collect her inheritance and pay off his debts.

But the film fails to live up to its name. After the botched attack, the characters are sent on a roller-coaster ride of double-crosses, blackmail, hate and betrayal.

Douglas is in top form — he rarely isn't — as the overextended stockbroker. Though his acting is good, it seems he's coming dangerously close to being typecast. Whatever happened to the diverse Douglas in films such as "Romancing the Stone" or "Falling Down"? In his past few films, he seems to be the same character put in a different situation. Don't misunderstand, Douglas is very good in them, but it's about time for him to try something different.

"A Perfect Murder" is based on the Alfred Hitchcock classic "Dial M for Murder," which was based on a play by Frederick Knott. In this version, director Andrew Davis, who directed "The Fugitive," takes the film almost too far. The characters seem to lose their believability as the picture wears on. The last quarter seems a bit too outrageous.

It is hard to feel sorry for any of the characters. The wife is having an affair, the husband conspires to have his wife murdered and the artist is, well, clearly not the hero. On top of that, none of these people is even likable. Sure, Paltrow is beautiful and Douglas is suave, but their characters just are not good people.

Delta Chis remember a brother; funds from Woman of the Year award donated to charity

AMANDA LEVIN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Delta Chi Fraternity is again presenting the Sorority Women of the Year award, but this year it's personal.

Two months ago, the brothers of Delta Chi lost a brother, Jim Komatz, to leukemia. The funds raised by the award will be donated to the American Leukemia Society in Komatz's memory.

"The heart of all the guys is really behind the award this year," said Matthew Killingsworth, sophomore in public relations and Delta Chi public-relations chair.

The winner of the Sorority Women of the Year will be announced Saturday at the Delta Chi Founders Day Banquet and House Dedication Ceremony.

This year, Delta Chi is putting more effort into the award to make it more prestigious and more of an honor for the recipient and Komatz, Killingsworth said.

Each sorority receives three applications that it may fill out and return to the fraternity.

The qualifications for entering are that the nominee must have a cumulative grade point average of 2.85 or above, be active in a least one non-greek extracurricular activity, be an active member of a K-State sorority and be enrolled in at least 12 credit hours.

"I was chosen by the house to participate. I couldn't turn it down. It is a great cause this year and a huge honor," said Brianne Dusin, Chi Omega member and sophomore in business.

After the fraternity receives the applications, a committee reviews them and chooses eight finalists. The finalists are interviewed by a panel consisting of the student body president, the Delta Chi president, the Delta Chi house mother, a representative from Greek Affairs and a representative from the Office of Student life.

From the finalists, one woman will be chosen and awarded a traveling trophy with her name engraved on it and prizes from participating sponsors, which Killingsworth said he was excited about.

"We've been really lucky this year. The Aggieville businesses and other local merchants have really given us some great donations," Killingsworth said.

THE E. WALTER MORRISON AWARD
Presented through KSU Student Foundation
• Nominations are now being accepted for this prestigous award.
• The winner receives a significant monetary award and a personalized plaque.
E. Walter Morrison was undaunted by the size or power of his opposition, he was able to achieve a number of objectives believed impossible by others. For his sincerity of purpose, his sense of justice, his faith in hard work and, above all, his perseverance we honor E. Walter Morrison.
Honor someone who demonstrates these principles by nominating them for this award. Nominees may be any member of the campus community (student, faculty, staff, alumnus, spouse of the preceding, etc.). Applications may be picked up in the Office of Student Activities and Services, ground floor of the KSU Student Union. Applications are due Oct. 19th in box #101 of the OSAS. Requests for applications to be sent out of town may be made by e-mail to Luke at ljm3630@ksu.edu

LE BALLET NATIONAL DU SENEGAL
WEST AFRICAN MUSIC AND DANCE
ORDER YOUR TICKETS TODAY!
Thursday, October 15, 7:30 p.m.
Public: $20, 16 Seniors: $18, 14
Students/Children: $10, 8

This company of 31 dancers and musicians dance to the beat of a different drummer. Their performance will make you want to jump up and join in.
"Simply watching Le Ballet National du Senegal is exhausting. So kinetically explosive and musically vociferous, it's difficult not to absorb the shock waves that ripple through the theater," says the Albany Daily Gazette. Accompanied by the powerful rhythms of drums and other traditional instruments, the dancers express the culture and traditions of West Africa. Don't miss this evening of exhilarating entertainment.
CALL MCCAIN AT 785-532-6428
You can charge your tickets to VISA, MasterCard, or Discover. Or stop by the box office, noon to 6 p.m. weekdays
Presented in part by the Kansas Arts Commission, a state agency, and the National Endowment for the Arts, a federal agency. Additional funding provided by the K-State Fine Arts Fee.

Rouletter Dates,
On October 10 we hope you're prepared, because for this party nothing is spared. Warm up the bus, cool down the beer, Rouletter's back for its 60th year. There's an eerienss around the AGR house, it scares Mom, the Alumni, and even the nouse. It's not just a barn party, we do it right, cause we won't stop until the morning's dawn light. This tradition is as old as any around, the best at KSU ever to be found. We would turn in our grave before dancing a line, but swinging and stepping twice you will surely find. So ladies get ready to two-step your way, into hearts and into the hay. It's the boots, the beer, the brothers together, it's the best damn party known as Rouletter. So prepare to get roudy underneath the stars, cause you haven't partied until it's with the AGR's.
The Rouletter Ghost
"The Boots, The Beer, The Brothers Together, it ain't just a party, It's a Roulotter!"

No action taken on 5 Development Committee projects

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Campus Development Committee met Thursday afternoon to review five campus projects, though no action was taken.

Among the projects, members looked at the plans for the expansion of KSU Stadium, Frank Myers Field and the site plan of the grain-science complex. They also reviewed the university's planned improvement of the Memorial Stadium playing field and how that will relate to the planned alumni center south of the stadium.

George Strecker, Faculty Senate's representative to the committee, asked how much money had been raised for the baseball and grain-science projects and why design could be allowed to begin if all the funds needed were not yet accumulated.

Helen Cooper, assistant director of facilities planning, said the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics had raised enough money to proceed, but she did not have specific amounts.

The football stadium expansion, a $12.8-million project, includes the addition of a new grandstand, bringing the stadium's seating to 45,000, up from 39,000. In addition, restrooms, concessions, suites and a new entrance plaza are planned. The $2-million baseball facility will be an 1,800-seat grandstand overlooking a renovated field. Both are privately financed projects.

The grain-science feed mill project is located just north of Kimball Avenue, across from the east football stadium parking lot. It will include 270,000 square feet of floor space and will be built as private funds are made available.

Cooper said a concern the committee will eventually discuss is how the Department of Grain Science plans on getting students to and from the new feed mill for classes. She said the committee will plan on bringing members of the department to an upcoming meeting for discussion.

The committee finished its new business with a presentation on the play field in Memorial Stadium. The university is replacing the field and installing new drainage systems. The track will take on an oval appearance to make way for the alumni center. The Alumni Association has agreed to pay for half of the $350,000 cost of the field's restoration.

The next committee meeting is at 1:30 p.m. on Oct. 26 in the facilities conference room in Dykstra Hall.

39-yarder against Baylor.

Moschetti's favorite target, Darren Chiaverini, has 25 catches on the season for 316 yards and four touchdowns. Chiaverini, a senior, is 6-foot-2-inches, 210 pounds and physical.

"They have a mobile quarterback, they have great receivers — they have it all, everything they do. They execute well, they just do it all," linebacker Jeff Kelly said.

The Buffs also are a threat to special teams, led by kick returner Ben Kelly. Snyder compared Kelly to K-State standout punt returner David Allen, except Kelly "probably has a step or two of quickness" on Allen. Kelly averages 30.9 yards on kickoff returns and 53 yards bringing back punts.

K-State will be looking for its first win in Boulder since 1973, a year before any of the current players were born. In 10 games at Folsom Field since then, the Cats have lost each time by an average score of 39-10. Snyder won't allow his players to dwell on the past, though.

"It just depends on how well we prepare ourselves and how well we play," Snyder said.

"I don't think 20 years ago has any impact on this ballgame. At least I certainly don't think it does. I don't think our players think that that's the case," he said.

"It all boils down to the last time we were there, we lost 12-0, and we didn't play well enough. We weren't prepared well enough in order to win the ballgame, and they were. It's that simple."

hours reviewing the evidence in the heavily secured room where the documents had been brought. Democrats, he said, had spent fewer than 22 hours — and only six of the panel's 16 members had ever entered the room.

Thursday's outcome was a foregone conclusion, with only the level of Democratic support in doubt.

But the turmoil within the Democratic caucus was evident as Gephardt struggled to craft an alternative that the party's lawmakers could rally behind. In the final hours before the vote, moderate lawmakers concerned about their political futures appealed unsuccessfully to the White House to drop its opposition to the GOP proposal. Their fear, they said, was that by voting with the Republicans, they would offend the core Democratic voters whose support is essential to any victory. By voting against the GOP resolution, though, they risked alienating the independent voters whose support is also essential to re-election in swing districts.

Joint venture to examine cultural effects of bicycle

■ K-State to join 5 European universities and 4 other U.S. schools for study.

BY SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new international exchange program is gearing up this fall — with a lot of emphasis on the gear.

K-State and four other U.S. universities are cooperating with five European universities to study the bicycle.

As part of the Scientific and Cultural Aspects of the Bicycle Exchange Program, European and American universities exchange students to pursue individual projects dedicated to how the two-wheeled wonder works and affects culture, said Dean Zollman, professor of physics and project coordinator.

The project, funded by the U.S. Department of Education and the European Commission, was created when Zollman and other educators, using the bicycle to teach physics across the globe, wanted to create a common product.

"We got the idea at the time that it would be really nice if we could combine our ideas with their ideas," Zollman said.

The current program pays selected candidates a stipend to spend three months in a participant university, pursuing an individual project that relates to the bicycle as either a machine or a cultural phenomenon.

One student already working through K-State is Sönke Schaal from Gissen University in Germany. Schaal, a student in physics and history, has been in Manhattan since August trying to use electronic interfaces to develop lesson plans for physics students.

The interfaces can measure factors such as heart rate, temperature and the bike's acceleration or velocity. Schaal said he is trying to decide how to use the data to make lessons that bring in other subjects but also make physics more appealing to students.

"In Germany, we have to make many connections to things like biology and see that the problem is not isolated. In real life, people cannot work in just physics thinking," Schaal said.

Using a bicycle for the study is unusual, but it's a good way to introduce things like acceleration or velocity, because almost everyone has ridden or at least seen a bicycle, he said.

"It's concrete, and they can do these things. I hope they won't think of physics as such a terrible thing," Schaal said.

Although he said most Americans think he is crazy to be working on bicycles where cars are much more common, Schaal said bike lanes are everywhere in Germany, complete with special traffic lights.

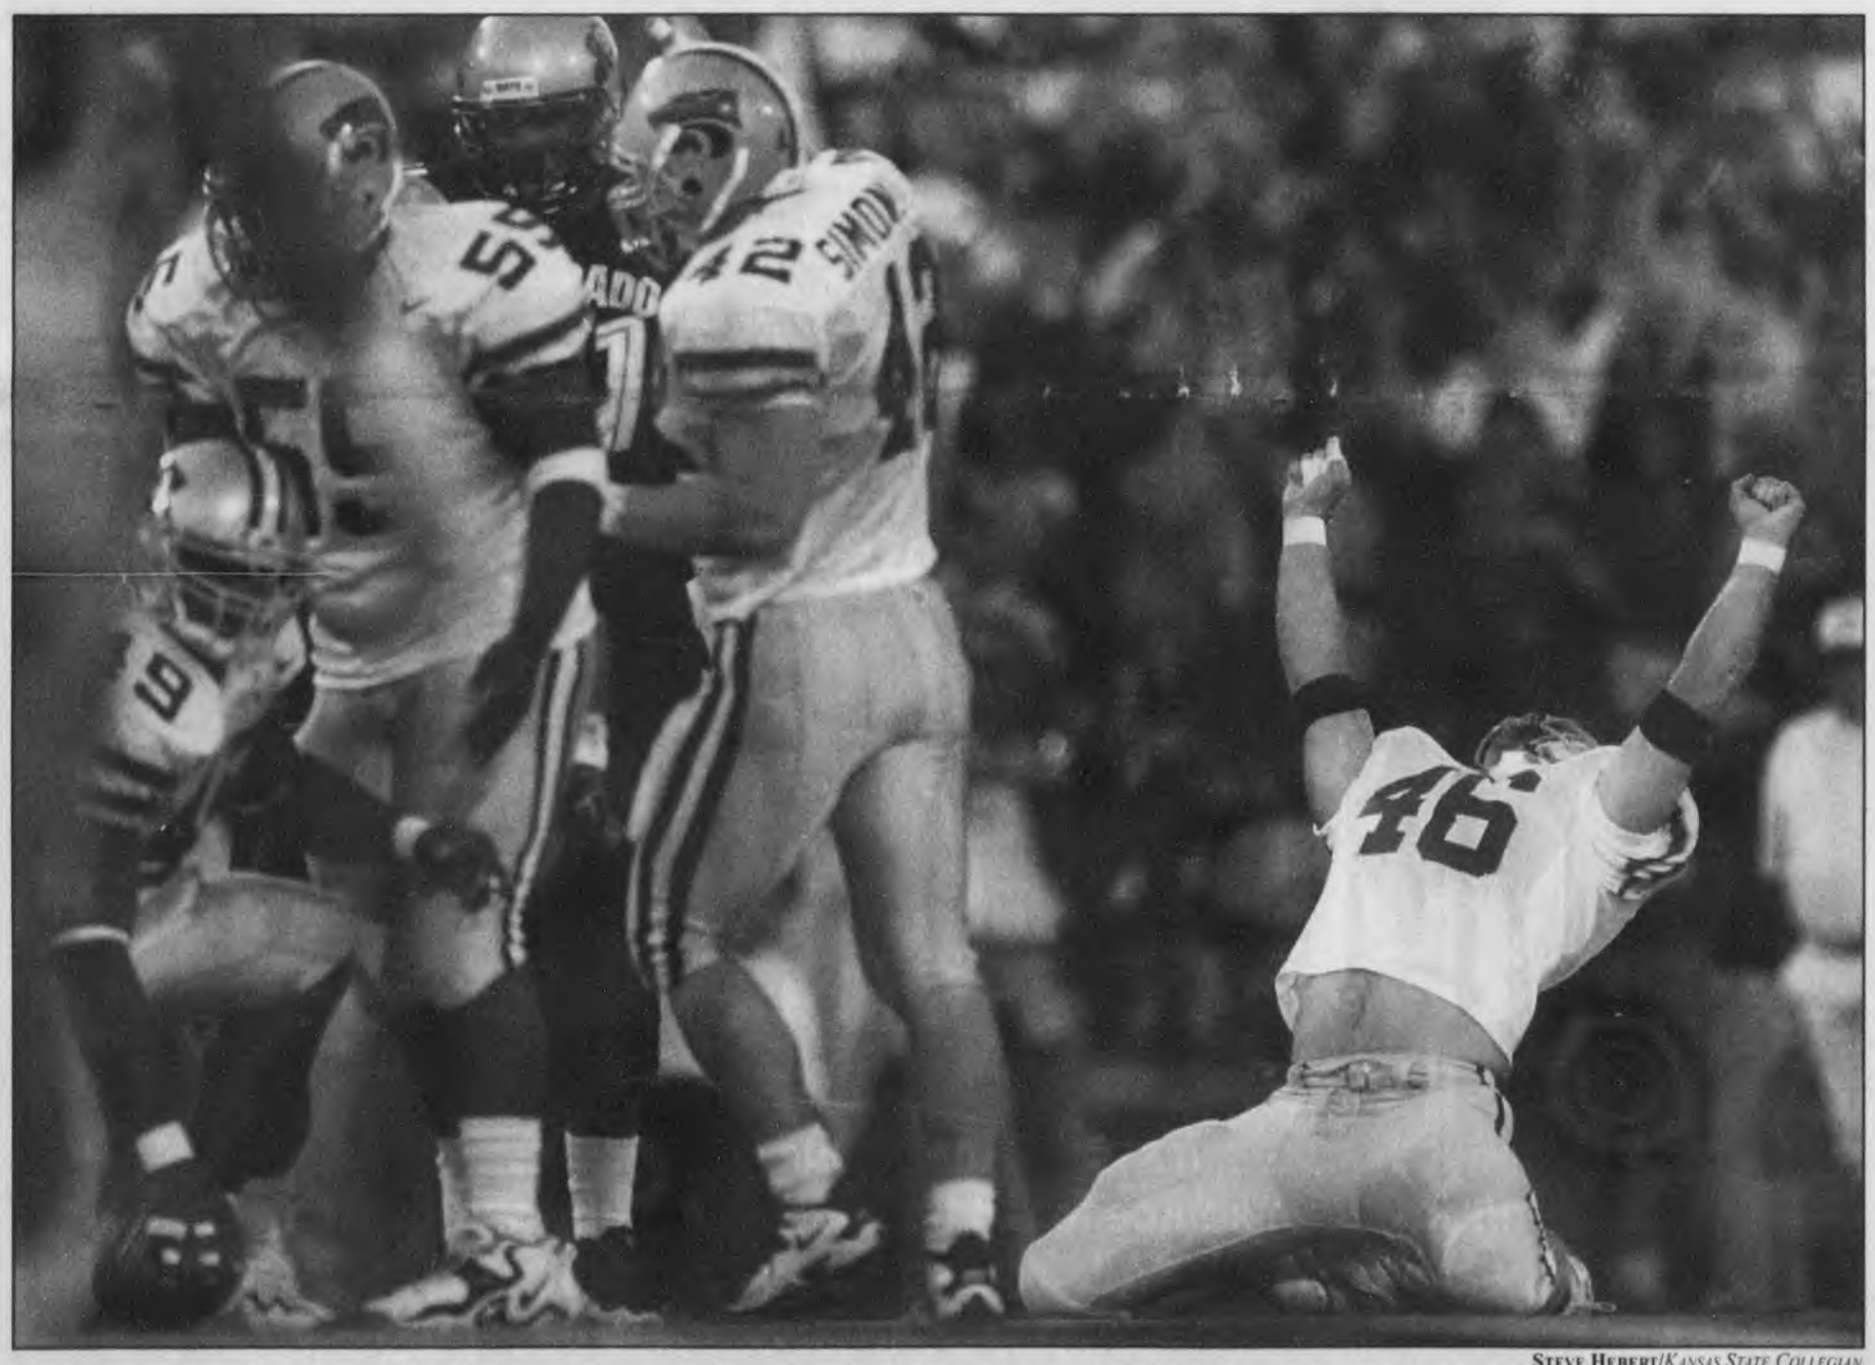
Joe Pingenot, sophomore in physics and computer engineering, will be able to see the lanes for himself when he goes to Christian-Albrechts University in Kiel, Germany this January.

Pingenot, who speaks fluent German and already visited the country in 1995, said his project almost certainly will be a computer game.

"Usually, the stuff you have when you do physics is just the facts, and it's kind of cut and dry. Fun is the key. If the person isn't interested, they won't learn anything," Pingenot said.

He said he might make a computer program to build a bike and run it through stress tests or even a riding simulation.

Pingenot said he also is looking forward to the trip to explore Germany again and look into the abstract math that interested him last time.



The project also wants more applicants outside of physics so more students can study the cultural effects of the bicycle, Zollman said.

"For students, I think the advantage is to be in that different culture with a definite focus. You can get a way of broadening things that increases what you can do. This program covers every area of study," Zollman said.

Once the studies have been completed, they will be combined as much as possible into a single educational tool or as clusters, he said.

With the federal funding, Zollman said the program hopes to exchange students for the next three years and continue beyond that third year, if more funds can be found.

Victim of hate crime in critical condition

BY E.N. SMITH
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LARAMIE, Wyo. — A gay college student was clinging to life Sunday as residents — gay and straight — condemned his brutal beating but defended Wyoming as a safe, fair-minded place to live.

Matthew Shepard was found savagely pistol-whipped and tied to a fence outside town last week. Police have said robbery was the main motive, but the two men accused in the bludgeoning also targeted Shepard because he flirted with one of them at a bar, The Denver Post reported Sunday.

Shepard, 21, was unconscious Sunday at a Fort Collins, Colo., hospital and in critical condition with severe head injuries. Hospital officials said his condition had deteriorated since the midweek beating.

Russell Arthur Henderson, 21, and Aaron James McKinney, 22, were charged with attempted murder, kidnapping and aggravated robbery, because Shepard's wallet and patent leather shoes were stolen. Police said they lured Shepard from a University of Wyoming hangout by telling him they were gay.

U.S. bombers set to strike Yugoslavia

■ As U.S. accelerates talks with Milosevic, NATO prepares to take action.

BY KATARINA KRATOVAC
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — U.S. bombers moved into position for possible NATO airstrikes on Yugoslavia and a U.S. envoy accelerated talks with President Slobodan Milosevic on Sunday after reporting no change in the leader's tough stand on Kosovo.

Richard Holbrooke and Milosevic had discussions late into the night Sunday, meeting for the sixth time in seven days in talks that signaled U.S. determination to search for a peaceful way out of the deadlock.

Holbrooke said early Sunday he would "continue an intense effort to find a peaceful, acceptable, fully verifiable compliance system as an alternative to the other choice" — meaning the use of force.

But he also said NATO would meet Monday to authorize action if his mediation effort fails.

In Washington, national security adviser Sandy Berger told CNN that Shoplifting garners attention of Manhattan law enforcement

BY TIM RICHARDSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Editor's note: Because of the sensitive nature of the issue, some names have been changed or not fully identified.

Shoplifting is getting the attention of local authorities.

Many of the shoplifting cases in Manhattan involve people who are not local residents. The county attorney's office recently began classes to teach local merchants how to avoid being a victim of theft in a city that often is targeted by people from out of town.

"I think it's a big problem," Riley County Attorney Bill Kennedy said. "We get a number of cases where it's obvious that people come to Manhattan to shoplift."

The county attorney's office only deals with cases involving thefts of more than $150, juveniles and theft outside the Manhattan city limits.

The county has about 12 cases involving adults annually and about 40 cases involving juveniles. The number has been virtually unchanged in recent years.

"There's a class of people that apparently makes a fair amount of money by shoplifting," Kennedy said.

Petty theft cases are brought to the Manhattan city attorney's office, which deals with about 20 cases each month. City prosecutor Chris Getty said tobacco products are popular items stolen from local stores.

Professional shoplifters are rare in Manhattan. Most of the cases involve juveniles, often committing their first offense. The typical punishment in such a case is $150 and 30 days probation for a jail sentence. The maximum penalty for shoplifting is six months behind bars and a $500 fine.

Although local authorities have not found an increase in shoplifting, the crime is becoming more popular nationwide. Reported cases have risen 30 percent since 1985.

"They feel a need for it," said James Shanteau, director of the Institute for Social and Behavioral Research. "There's a kind of risk or a high that you get. The fear of getting caught makes it exciting. If they get away with it, it feels like an accomplishment."

L. Susan Williams, assistant professor of sociology and criminology, said young people who steal normally don't carry the habit to adulthood. According to some theories, a young shoplifter who is not prosecuted is actually better off in the long run. A young person who is expelled from school and taken to a juvenile detention center might be more likely to lead a life of crime.

Most of the cases do involve young people, but Williams said 10 percent of shoplifters nationwide are professionals. Although local authorities have not found an increase in shoplifting, the crime is becoming more popular nationwide. Reported cases have risen 30 percent since 1985.

"It certainly crosses all class lines," Williams said. "At least evidence shows it's more among the young. The youth are more likely to commit crimes."

Local cases often involve college students.

Getty said of the four or five cases involving shoplifting he dealt with last week, three were by college students.

"We do see a pattern of college students shoplifting. It tends to be petty items," he said. "They don't realize it's a serious offense."

Lydia, a sales associate at Sears, Roebuck and Co. in Manhattan, said she has not noticed the trend.

"I haven't found that college students are any more or less likely to steal than the general population," she said.

Customers who wear oversized coats, carry large shopping bags and do not want to be acknowledged by employees often are suspicious. Shoplifters don't always work alone. In cases of group theft, the employees are distracted while other members steal the merchandise.

Sears installed cameras more than a year ago to help apprehend shoplifters. Lydia said deterrence was not the main reason for cameras but rather finding out where problem areas existed in the store.

"The honest customers far outnumber the customers we have problems with," she said. "We don't want anyone to think we're not trusting."

Hog farm opponents hear strategy for fight

GREAT BEND, Kan. — Growth in corporate hog farming threatens society as well as the environment, speakers told a symposium organized by nine groups opposed to the large operations.

About 200 people attending the nine-hour symposium Saturday were given facts that organizers said they hoped the audience would use to confront corporate farming back home.

Participants were urged to fight for local control over how and where corporate farms are built and for stricter environmental rules.

The symposium was in Great Bend, where Seaboard Farms plans to build a packing plant to slaughter 4 million hogs a year — double the number raised in Kansas now.

Kendall Thu of the University of Iowa said opponents of corporate farming often are characterized as emotional and taking positions out of line with scientific fact.

He said research into corporate hog farming often is financed by those interested in promoting such farms and fails to take into account such social effects as community distrust, intense conflict and neighbor pitted against neighbor.

Another speaker, anthropologist Mark Grey of the University of Northern Iowa, has studied the southwest Kansas community of Garden City, where meatpacking plants have attracted large numbers of minorities, immigrants and refugees.

The influx of people creates a strain on social services, health care and housing, Grey said.

Environmental concerns cannot be ignored, said Mike Dealy, director of the Equus Beds Groundwater Management District, the aquifer that provides drinking water to Wichita.

Regulations allow a quarter-inch per day of waste to seep out of containment lagoons — meaning as much as 1.2 million gallons of wastewater a year could seep out of a 1-acre lagoon into the aquifer.

"We're talking about our political and social future," Dealy said.

Little-known bills get lost in end of session

WASHINGTON, D.C. — It is the 105th Congress' wish-list of rejects, the high-profile and little-known bills lost in the rush of the frantic last days of the legislative session.

The more prominent include an $80 billion tax cut, a patients' "bill of rights," sweeping overhauls of bankruptcy and financial services laws, and a $1-an-hour increase in the federal minimum wage.

With both houses heading toward adjournment, it is highly unlikely these measures, for all the attention they drew during the past two years, can make it through this Congress.

Away from the political footlights, other measures died with little fanfare.

Another missed opportunity: The House on Thursday laid the groundwork for U.S. ratification of treaties designed to enhance copyright protections for musicians, filmmakers, writers and software developers who send their works over the Internet. These treaties have been signed by more than 100 countries.

A compromise measure had been worked out earlier with the Senate — but Senate passage and subsequent treaty ratification failed to follow. The reason wasn't immediately clear.

Among other proposals that didn't make it:

■ A constitutional amendment to outlaw burning or desecration of the American flag, a measure that has been put forward in every recent congressional session.

■ A measure that would have prevented doctors from prescribing lethal doses of controlled drugs to assist in a suicide.

■ A "flex time" bill that would apply to workers earning hourly wages in the private sector. It would have given them the same scheduling options accorded to federal workers and some management employees in private business, such as "time-and-a-half" compensatory time off.

Wife's kidney proves duo is 'perfect match'

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. — Judy and Jesse Paluck celebrated their fifth wedding anniversary dressed in hospital gowns and surgical stockings, barely able to hold each other's hands.

For the Palucks, the setting and the gift Judy offered — a kidney — proved they were a perfect match.

"I think we were meant for each other and were meant to go through this," Judy Paluck, 29, said Friday, a day after donating a kidney to her 32-year-old husband. "That it happened so close to our anniversary is a sign."

Doctors said the prognosis is good for Jesse Paluck, whose kidney was damaged by lupus, a disease that affects the body's immune system.

Experts said the fact that the surgery took place at all is unusual given the difficulties involved. In 1997, fewer than 3 percent of all kidney transplants in the United States were spouse-to-spouse.

CORRECTIONS

Due to a writer's error, two sources' names were misspelled in a story about K-State soccer in Friday's Collegian. Dan Feimster and Charles Hedgcoth were misidentified in the story.

Due to a copy editor's error, a source's gender was referred to incorrectly in a story about students' opinions of the Clinton scandal in Friday's Collegian. Meshell Barker, a female freshman at Manhattan Christian College, was incorrectly identified.

A headline on Friday's Collegian was incorrect. An impeachment inquiry against the president has been launched.

The Collegian regrets the errors.

Disputes over money, policy issues keep lawmakers from agreement on budget

CLINTON

■ Measure to keep government in operation expires tonight; neither side wants shutdown.

By ALAN FRAM
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Clinton on Sunday called for a budget "that is worthy of our children," as White House and congressional bargainers sought a truce for their spending battle that would let lawmakers go home to campaign for re-election.

Budget negotiators met yet again at the Capitol to sort through scores of disputes over money and policy, even as top Republicans went on television trying to define the fight. They sought to portray a president who has been distracted by scandal, repeated fund-raising trips and who has rejected GOP proposals for tax breaks and vouchers aimed at students.

"Now, all of a sudden, he shows up. Where has he been all year?" House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, asked on ABC's "This Week."

In an office just paces from the Capitol Rotunda, White House chief of staff Erskine Bowles and an administration team bargained with House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga.; Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss.; and other congressional leaders.

Nearly two weeks after the government's new fiscal year began, eight of the 13 annual spending measures remain incomplete. The stopgap measure keeping the government operating expires tonight.

Neither side is willing to let the dispute escalate into a federal shutdown that could hurt incumbents' re-election bids, and Clinton said he would sign another short-term bill to keep agencies at work.

"We're not going to shut the government down if we're working on this, of course," he told reporters at the White House. "No one is interested in doing that."

The eight unfinished spending bills for 1999 have a total value of about $500 billion, more than one-third of the total federal budget.

Clinton said he wants about $3 billion more for programs he favors, including more than $1 billion for helping school districts hire 100,000 more teachers, more funding for Russia and other former Soviet states, toxic-waste cleanups and food-safety efforts.

Republicans have signaled they are willing to provide about $2 billion but want some of the money spent for programs they prefer, such as education funds that states could dispense as they please.

"They want it to dribble down, dribble down, eventually get to the local community and schools," Lott said on CBS' "Face the Nation."

"We want the money to get to the parents, the teachers, the administrators at the local level."

Clinton stuck to his insistence for more education spending, a theme that has tested well in Democratic polls for years.

"It's time once again for Congress to cross party lines and send me an education budget that I can sign that is worthy of our children and their future," he said.

Also separating the two sides were piles of policy fights.

Included were disputes over Clinton's plans for voluntary national testing of elementary school students, a conservative effort to ban federal aid to groups working to liberalize other countries' abortion laws, and whether the 2000 census should use scientific sampling to help count hard-to-reach people.

Maneuvering also was under way on requests from both sides for billions of dollars in so-called emergency spending.

Clinton has requested about $12 billion for items that include modernizing federal computers, enhancing security at U.S. embassies abroad and repairing damage from Hurricane Georges.

Aides said that Republicans want about $7 billion for defense spending, including about $1.5 billion for intelligence operations and another $1 billion for anti-missile defenses.

Teachers learn other languages to help children belong

Both students, teachers benefit at KSU Child Development Center

By SUZANNE WILSON
Kansas State Collegian

Communication at the KSU Child Development Center is a challenge for some teachers.

Nearly 35 percent of the children are from international backgrounds, making different languages a fact of life.

Lillian Bozzo, assistant teacher at the center, is learning Russian to help a student in her class. She said she felt it was something she had to do.

"Because English is my second language, I really know how he's feeling," Bozzo said. "When my daughter came here, she was kind of feeling the same way."

Starla Reagan, lead teacher at the center, said the instructors are able to communicate with the boy.

"We know we are at least pronouncing the words close enough that he understands," Reagan said.

One teacher said trying to speak Russian with the boy was a challenge.

"We were looking at a book, and he was talking to me in Russian," said Stephanie Smith, junior in elementary education and substitute teacher at the center.

"I tried to say 'dog' in Russian, but he didn't respond, so I don't think I said it right."

Bozzo said she was able to get some Russian language books from another teacher at the center to learn to speak with the boy.

"It's difficult, because Russian is completely different," she said. "His parents want him to learn English, so we say things to him in English, then Russian."

Reagan said they also used signs and visual aids to help him learn the English words.

"When we're having lunch, we say the word 'eat' to him," Reagan said. "The best way to learn is a everyday routine."

Bozzo said she has taught other children how to say some words in Russian so they can communicate with him.

She said they have picked up other words from talking with him.

"The children are like sponges right now, they get everything," Bozzo said.

Reagan said that sometimes the children even help if the teacher forgets how to say something.

Bozzo also is teaching the children some Spanish.

Reagan said they send practice words home with the children, so parents can help them to use the language.

Bozzo said most of the children knew English before they arrived at the center, but adjusting to the new environment made speaking it difficult.

Parents gave the teachers lists of words their children could speak in their native languages, she said.

Reagan said learning other languages will help the children later in life.

It gives them a good basis for the different languages and with practice, they can use it the rest of their lives, she said.

Hate crimes tarnish harmony's progress

Just when you think progress is being made, another hate crime occurs.

Such was the case for Matthew Shepard, a gay college student from the University of Wyoming, who was beaten severely by two men last week. Shepard was pistol-whipped savagely and tied to a fence outside town, left to die.

In light of Sunday being National Coming Out Day and last week being the 10th-annual recognition of Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week, it is tragic events such as this that shed light on a harsh reality. While it seems that progress is being made by many to understand and tolerate other cultures and lifestyles, including homosexuality, the actions of two people have tarnished these ideas with the blood of a hate crime's victim. Our progress is at a standstill.

It is time to put an end to this madness.

The idea of celebrating National Coming Out Day is to acknowledge that homosexuals and bisexuals are ever-present in our society, be it in Kansas or in Wyoming. These individuals who come out to you are your friends, co-workers, employers, neighbors and the people who say hello to you on the street. They are people who, like their heterosexual counterparts, are at college for an education.

All they want is to be tolerated, and hate crimes such as the one in Wyoming are the hindrances that keep us from progressing as a society to the tolerance and acceptance of gays, lesbians and bisexuals.

If homosexual and bisexual students cannot feel safe or accepted on their own campuses, then no progress is being made.

The Collegian editorial board challenges you to learn. Know that there are, in fact, homosexual and bisexual students on campus, and dare to take a stand against the acts of violence that hinder our progress toward becoming an accepting community. Recognize these hate crimes and take all possible steps to ensure that homosexual and bisexual students feel welcome at K-State.

Only when these actions are instigated can our progress continue, and we can move forward. If these actions are taken, perhaps we can celebrate National Coming Out Day next year with acceptance instead of bloodshed.

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and other staff members. OUR VIEW is the Collegian's official opinion.

Doctor gives differing opinion about piercing-ear infection

Editor,

Our office has read the article by Mary VanLeeuwen regarding the cost of treatment of her cartilage-piercing ear infection.

As medical practitioners, we are empathetic with VanLeeuwen's concerns regarding the cost of medical care (we struggle with this daily in our delivery of care), but I believe her anger is somewhat misdirected at our practice and that she is naive regarding health-care costs.

In rebuttal, I would like to make the following points:

1) VanLeeuwen had a surgical procedure performed by non-medical personnel. She signed a disclaimer, but I would bet she did not receive proper informed consent regarding potential complications. This is substantiated by her statement that when she called them back about redness and pus, they told her she was fine.

2) VanLeeuwen received excellent medical care at Lafene Health Center at a cost below industry norms. She must understand that Lafene is subsidized by the state of Kansas and our tax dollars. Lafene could not operate on its charges to the patient alone.

3) VanLeeuwen unfortunately equates time of contact with expense of service. I wish I had the time to educate her on the cost of our overhead and the expense of an additional 10 years of post-graduate speciality training. She should realize the cost value is equated with proper medical evaluation, decision and treatment. She also had the additional benefit of phone contact from Lafene to us in the morning and was supplied sample antibiotics for additional savings.

4) A cartilage chondritis is a stubborn, serious infection that can have a poor cosmetic outcome. The medical costs of delayed treatment can be astronomical. A year ago, I treated a cartilage-piercing chondritis where the treatment was delayed. This resulted in three surgical procedures, eight days of hospitalization and four weeks of home intravenous-antibiotic therapy. Total cost: more than $30,000.

5) After VanLeeuwen sought medical care, she received excellent, timely and appropriate treatment. I hope someday she will understand that $243 for her care was a bargain.

Lack of snooze button on biological clock increases urge to procreate

Tick, tock.

From the sound of it, you would think I was carrying Big Ben on my back. I hear it everywhere I go. At age 26, my biological clock is ticking louder than Anderson Avenue construction with every passing moment. Tick, tock.

Many a bad movie has been based on the idea that sometime in her late 20s or early 30s, a woman's biological clock begins to pound away like a heartbeat in a bad horror flick. I always had figured the notion was just some contrived comic device. I wasn't expecting it ever to happen to me. Tick, tock.

It started quietly. I held a baby and felt something strange. Tick, tock. I smelled the baby's head and played with her little toes. Tick, tock. A few weeks later, I rubbed the belly of a pregnant woman. Tick, tock.

Everywhere I go, there are babies or pregnant women. Television ads for tires feature babies in cute little raincoats. Magazine ads for carpet show sleeping babies. The mall is chock-full of babies. The maternity section of every clothing store taunts me. Tick, tock.

And, they are following me. They travel in packs like wolves. Walking through a store will be one woman pushing a stroller with a new baby in it, and waddling alongside her will be a woman, pregnant and glowing. I get in line only to be sandwiched between a new mommy and daddy and a woman who looks like she will give birth right there if the line doesn't move fast enough. Tick, tock.

I get weepy now at life-insurance ads. I wander through the baby sections of department stores and test-drive strollers. I even will admit to pulling my shirts out in front of a mirror to get an idea of just how big I could get.

Tick, tock.

All of this is a strange concept to most students. A large number of you are just hitting the big 2-0, and children won't appear in the great plan of your life for a few more years. That is where you should be right now.

But for me, it feels like time is running out. I know that women have babies well into their 30s and beyond. Every family has a story about the surprise baby that Grandma had in her 40s, but I don't want to have a baby at that age.

I am happily married to a wonderful man. We are financially stable, more than less. We have a house and a dog. We are healthy, responsible parents to our two children, ages 9 and 7.

The problem is, we have time to plan for a baby. Bringing another human being into the world is a big decision; it should take awhile to decide. There is so much to consider. Is this the right time to have a baby? Do we have the money to send this baby to college? Do we need more bedrooms? Do I really want to gain 60 pounds?

But it is possible to think too much. There is no perfect time to have a baby. You can't ever have enough money. You can't ever be in the perfect house. You can't ever have the perfect job. You can't ever have the perfect body.

That is where the clock comes in. The tick, tock is your body's way of reminding you of all the wonders of motherhood. The weight of a baby in your arms. The little sounds a baby makes while it is sleeping. The excitement of the first word. The magic of kissing a boo-boo.

Tick, tock.

Comfort overrides need to assimilate to fashion

"HOPEFULLY, YOUR PARENTS STILL DON'T SHOP FOR YOU; WE JUST WEAR WHAT FEELS GOOD AND LEAVE IT AT THAT."

Walking to class every day at the god-forsaken time of 8 a.m., it always does my heart good to see students dressed in pajama pants, big fuzzy sweatshirts and tattered baseball caps.

You see, I've always been an advocate of dressing casually.

This isn't to say, however, that I am lazy or sloppy when it comes to clothes. I just enjoy attending class in comfort every once in awhile and not having to worry about dressing to impress. I've always firmly believed that life is too short to worry about the latest fashions and their costliness.

In high school, fashion was a way of life and defined the clique to which you belonged. More specifically, in my high school, if you were "in," you worshiped Tommy Hilfiger. Clothing, at that time, defined you and who you were.

Now that most of us are comfortable with who we are and what we have become, it seems that fashion has become less of a priority. Our personalities are defined by what we believe and what we wish to do with our lives, not by a brand name that is plastered across our chests. Unless you are studying fashion for a career in the industry, it ceases to be a concern in college.

The best part of this is that, well, no one gives a damn what you're wearing. Last Friday, for instance, I woke up 10 minutes before my 8:30 a.m. class began. I tossed on a pair of sweats, halfheartedly combed my tousled hair and dragged myself to Eisenhower Hall.

The thing is, no one even blinked at my disheveled appearance. They simply walked on in an early morning daze, the blank looks on their faces telling me that they, too, had a weak grasp on consciousness.

Being one who loves attention, this disappointed me a bit, but it made me realize that when you think about it, no one really gives a rip what you're wearing. For college students, pajama pants, sweatshirts, grubby tennis shoes and old baseball caps are a way of life.

The biggest thing that interests me about this change from fashion slaves to sweatshirt gurus is the fact that we are, in a sense, reclaiming a bit of our childhood. When we were children, our parents bought our clothes for us, and we wore them because we had to — no questions asked. As a child, I don't remember asking my parents to buy me a pair of OshKosh B'Gosh overalls, KangaRoos tennis shoes or those hideous tube socks with the big colored stripes on them, but I just accepted what I was bought and wore these items. All I knew was that these items kept me from running around the playground buck naked.

A few years later, things weren't as easy.

During puberty, as we became more aware of clothes becoming a forum for popularity, we spent countless hours at the mall with our friends, mindlessly forking over our parents' money to purchase the outfits that were being worn by everyone else. Sure, there wasn't a trace of individuality in our entire sixth-grade class, but hey, we were all cool, because we all wore the same bitchin' clothes.

Now, we have reverted back to the mind-set we possessed when we were kids. Hopefully, your parents still don't shop for you; we just wear what feels good and leave it at that.

The rat race of who has the coolest clothes long since has ended, and windpants and sweatshirts have ushered in the Era of Comfort. It is a phenomenon on college campuses everywhere, so take advantage of wearing what you like and what feels good to you.

Besides, in a couple of years, we'll be full swing into the work force, where attending business meetings in pajama pants and house slippers might not be accepted by our employers. So wear what you like and toss fashion sense to the wind, because the opportunity to do so again might not come along for a while.

Republicans, Democrats try to find punishments short of impeachment

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Accusations against President Clinton in the Monica Lewinsky affair fall so far short of being impeachable offenses that impeachment would endanger future presidents, the White House said Sunday.

The comments came as word surfaced of discussions among congressional Republicans and Democrats on ways to punish the president short of impeachment.

A Democratic senator said two actions Clinton should take first are to correct his testimony to prosecutor Kenneth Starr's grand jury and to settle the Paula Jones sexual harassment case now on appeal.

Greg Craig, the White House's new special counsel, said the House Judiciary Committee has legitimate reason to call Starr to testify in its impeachment inquiry.

Whatever Starr's report to the committee accuses Clinton of having done, Craig said, "It does not rise to the level of impeachable offense standard that we have used throughout history, and we lower that standard at our peril.

"It would do grave damage to the presidency and to future presidents if the bar were lowered," Craig said.

The House Republican staff has outlined evidence of 15 possible grounds for impeachment, including conspiracy, false testimony, obstruction of justice and witness tampering.

Craig said there are serious questions about the way Starr conducted his investigation and the White House view is that committee members "may well have a number of questions to ask Mr. Starr."

Craig did not suggest specifically that Starr should be summoned and said it is premature to say whether Clinton should be a witness in the House inquiry, as some members of Congress have suggested.

"We've got to first determine what the rules and the processes are and what the intention of this committee is as it goes forward," Craig said. "Is it going to be a repeat of the unfair and partisan party-line kind of stuff that we saw during the first month? Or are we going to achieve some success in elevating the debate?"

An alternative to impeachment was among topics a small group of House Republicans and Democrats discussed at a breakfast meeting Saturday.

Majority Whip Tom DeLay said he's convinced Starr's office will send other referrals to the House.

Noting that congressional panels are looking into allegedly illegal campaign donations and technology transfers to China approved by the Clinton administration, DeLay said, "They should be referred to the Judiciary Committee, if they are offenses that could be impeachable."

Office helps students understand rights

■ Consumer and Tenant Affairs provides advice on landlord, tenant disputes.

By Amanda Levin
Kansas State Collegian

Many K-State students enter into tenant status each year, sign leases and move into their new apartments or houses with no worries.

Somewhere along the way, something sometimes can go wrong.

The Consumer and Tenant Affairs office is a free service that helps students figure out what went wrong and how they can handle the situation.

CTA provides information on landlord and tenant rights and responsibilities, mediates roommate disputes, provides off-campus housing searches, aids in resolving consumer complaints on products and services, and provides a roommate-matching service.

"We help students to understand their rights and responsibilities and many times act as a mediator between landlords and tenants," CTA Director Emie Wiechman said.

From a case-study report for the period of January 1998 to July 1998, CTA aided in 81 cases of rental problems and four cases of consumer problems.

"I had so many problems checking out of University Commons last year. They tried to over-charge me for cleaning, and they threw away some of my things," Emily Knight, junior in elementary education, said. "Emie has been a big help, writing letters for me and making me understand the right action I needed to take."

Once the office is contacted about a situation, it acts immediately to figure out what the problem is and what action can be taken.

"I will often times call the landlord and get their side of the story, then proceed as necessary helping the students document things, writing letters and serving as a disinterested third-party witness," Wiechman said.

Erin Burks, office assistant for continuing education, received guidance from CTA to get back her security deposit.

"My landlord would not give me an itemized list for the money they took out of my deposit," Burks said. "I went to Consumer and Tenant Affairs, and I found out it was required by law that they give me the list. Emie wrote a letter, and now I feel confident I will see some action."

CTA is located in the K-State Student Union in the Office of Student Activities and Services.

"The best advice I can give is to read your contract thoroughly," Wiechman said. "It is a binding contract, and there is a lot of fine print that, if read carefully, will help avoid confusion in the future."

BOULDER, Colo. — K-State's football team finally faced its first test of the season when it traveled to Colorado on Saturday.

The Wildcats passed the test with a 16-9 victory, but they sure had problems coming up with the answers.

K-State (5-0, 2-0 in Big 12 Conference play), which had won its first four games by an average margin of 62-5, needed an illegal participation penalty against Colorado (5-1, 2-1) with less than a minute remaining in the game to hold off a furious Buffalo comeback and seal the victory.

HICKSON

"I don't think our football team is really pleased with the way we won the ball game," K-State coach Bill Snyder said. "I've been hearing things all week — I don't know who says those things about ugly wins, but if there is such a thing as an ugly win, you've witnessed one today."

The Cats won in Boulder for the first time since 1973 but struggled offensively for the first time this season. K-State hasn't had a game without a 35-point half yet this season but managed only 10 in the first and six in the second Saturday.

Quarterback Michael Bishop, who entered the game with the second-highest pass efficiency rating in the nation, completed only nine of 25 passes for 148 yards and an interception. He also gained only 19 yards on 13 rushing attempts.

"Michael did not play as well as I would have liked for him to play, and he did not have a lot of help today," Snyder said. "They had a good scheme to take away some of the things Michael might normally be effective with."

Despite the low numbers, Bishop consistently guided the Cats down the field throughout the game. However, several mistakes kept K-State out of the end zone.

On K-State's second drive of the game, a holding call on a third-and-goal situation pushed the Cats from touchdown range to field-goal range. Later in the game, a touchdown reception by Gavin Peries was negated by offensive pass interference.

K-State also suffered from dropped balls and turnovers. The Cats entered the game with the nation's No. 1 turnover ratio but lost two of four fumbles in addition to Bishop's interception.

"Turnovers were a big factor," Snyder said. "If you come back and look at the second half, we're moving the football, then we turn it over, and we're moving the football, then we turn it over, and we're moving the football, then we get a penalty, then we're moving the football and we turn it over again. Those things hurt you."

Despite the low numbers, Bishop consistently guided the Cats down the field throughout the game. However, several mistakes kept K-State out of the end zone.

K-State took the lead with 4:25 to go in the first quarter on a 30-yard field goal by Martin Gramatica. Gramatica, who had missed two field goals in the Cats' game against Northeast Louisiana, was three-for-three on the day, connecting from 33 and 41 yards out in the second half.

His nine points kept a 16-9 win from becoming a 9-7 defeat.

"I don't care about the field goals," Gramatica said. "Really, I'd rather kick extra points than field goals because we'd be scoring touchdowns. But we won, and that's all that matters. That's what we came here to do. Now we can go home happy."

Defensively, the Cats turned in their fifth strong performance in five games.

K-State's defense held the Buffs scoreless through the first 54:17 of the game. The Cats limited the Buffs to 1.2 yards per rush, 262 total yards and 13 first downs and recorded five sacks.

"I think we played well as a defense," linebacker Jeff Kelly said. "We came up and stopped them when we had to. I knew our defense would rise to the occasion."

K-State scored its only touchdown in the second quarter. The Cats started that scoring drive on the 50 after defensive end Darren Howard recovered a fumble by Colorado quarterback Mike Moschetti. On the first play of the drive, Bishop hit wide receiver Aaron Lockett 44 yards down the right sideline, setting up a first-and-goal from the 6-yard-line.

MURPHY

After two Eric Hickson carries pushed the ball up to the two, fullback Brian Goolsby, running behind the lead block of defensive end/fullback Monty Beisel, powered the ball in for the Cats' lone touchdown of the game.

Hickson finished the game as K-State's leading rusher with 137 yards on 29 carries, but he lost two fumbles. Running back Frank Murphy, a community-college transfer who was suspended from K-State's first four games after accepting money from athletic boosters to buy a used car, was expected to contribute in his debut for the Cats.

However, Murphy, who has been timed at 4.21 in the 40, gained only one yard on two carries. He only saw the field for one play before the fourth quarter.

Snyder said he kept Murphy from seeing considerable playing time for his own safety. Murphy was reported to have said he was going to rush for 80 yards on his first carry against Colorado and after the misquote became bulletin-board material, Snyder limited Murphy's time because he "was worried about how he would be received here."

Murphy has not given any interviews this fall, and the quote attributed to him was actually something Bishop was quoted as saying Murphy had said. However, Murphy denied ever making the comments.

"All I want to say about the quote that was in the paper about the 80-yard run and all this, I didn't say," Murphy said. "I just want to tell the coach of Colorado that he has a good team, and I wouldn't disrespect the team like that, and it was a good ball game."

Wildcat defense picks up slack when Bishop, offense struggle

BY JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

BOULDER, Colo. — After cruising through four games with a nice balance of offense and defense, the K-State defense must have felt abandoned by its counterpart against Colorado on Saturday.

On a day when the K-State offense played below its standards, the nation's No. 1 defense stepped up and carried the Cats to a 16-9 victory over the Buffaloes.

Providing relentless pressure on CU quarterback Mike Moschetti and forcing the Buffs into nine punts, the defense took a shutout into the fourth quarter before weathering a late CU comeback.

Although less than pleased with the play of his offense, K-State coach Bill Snyder said he was content with the defensive performance.

"We had a half that I wasn't real pleased with," Snyder said. "However, considering what the score was, I wasn't unhappy."

The Cats continually disrupted the offensive game plan of Moschetti, who was sacked five times, including three by defensive end Joe Bob Clements, which tied the school record.

When he wasn't on the ground, Moschetti fumbled once, was hurried twice and had three passes broken up.

SIMONEAU

In assessing the defense's performance, linebacker Jeff Kelly said the squad felt no pressure to bail out the offense.

"We came up and stopped them when we had to," he said. "I knew our defense would rise to the occasion. As a defense, we like to be on the field. We want to be part of the game."

Although the defense spent much of the night on the field, the Buffaloes could not put together a consistent drive until the fourth quarter.

After a touchdown pass to wide receiver Marcus Stiggers cut the K-State lead to 16-6 with 5:42 left in the game, the Cats responded by stuffing the Buffaloes' two-point conversion.

Colorado tacked on a 20-yard field goal that put them within a touchdown with 1:46 remaining. However, the Cats' D was never challenged again.

"They're a great team," Kelly said. "They have their weapons just like we have our weapons. They struggled, but then they came back, and we stopped them at the end."

K-State weathered the Buffaloes' offensive attack by allowing only two conversions on 15 third-down attempts and continued to attack the ball in packs.

The defense produced three players — Mark Simoneau, Lamar Chapman and Jarrod Cooper — who led the squad with nine tackles each.

Entering the game, Colorado coach Rick Neuheisel said the Buffs' strategy would be to wear down the Cats' defense by using multiple substitutions throughout the game.

This strategy was most evident in the CU backfield, where Colorado used five separate running backs to balance its passing game.

Regardless of the fresh legs, the Cats held Colorado to 37 yards on 31 attempts and never allowed CU to establish a solid running game.

When asked about Neuheisel's strategy, Simoneau said the defense never felt threatened by fatigue.

"They got some plays on us tonight, but in the end, we kept them down," Simoneau said. "We hung in there throughout the game. At the end, I felt better than I did at the start."

PJ Harvey's new album is one of the first to come out in the fall batch of new albums.

Autumn brings variety of big-name releases

BY DAVID PANJADA
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Just like in the movie business, record executives plan their important album releases at key times. The albums planned for release this fall are no exception. In the coming months, quite a few big albums in a variety of genres will be released.

Albums out now:

Hole, "Celebrity Skin" — With the help of Billy Corgan, Courtney Love and Co. have crafted, arguably, their best record yet. Full of addictive hooks and catchy choruses, "Celebrity Skin" might be the best pop-rock record of the year.

Local H, "Pack Up the Cats" — Lyrics are not important on Local H's latest, but "Pack Up the Cats" is possibly the most rocking album of the fall.

P.J. Harvey, "Is This Desire?" — After nearly four years, Harvey finally is following up her critically acclaimed "To Bring You My Love." Harvey's fans will not be disappointed, but others are not likely to appreciate Harvey's genius.

Oct. 27:

R.E.M., "Up" — R.E.M. soon will release "Up," its first album without longtime drummer Bill Berry. The first single, "Daysleeper," already has been released.

Phish, "Story of the Ghost" — Seeking to capture some of the magic of its live performances, Phish chose an unconventional approach to recording. Phish began by using some trademark jams as a foundation around which to build songs. The result is a positive deviation from its previous albums.

Nov. 3:

Alanis Morissette, "Supposed Former Infatuation Junkie" — With the most highly anticipated record of the year, Morissette is attempting a successful follow-up to the smash "Jagged Little Pill." The track list finally has been released, and the first single, "Thank You," will be out soon.

Beck, "Mutations" — After reaching superstar status with "Odelay," Beck will key down the samples on this follow-up album. The self-described "space-age/folk/rock" was recorded live in the studio with Beck's touring band. "Mutations" will receive little promotion; Geffen has no plans to release a single or video.

Oasis, "The Masterplan" — Oasis' latest release will feature a collection of "B-sides" from the band's singles. The album will include the psychedelic Beatles cover "I Am the Walrus" and the live favorite "Acquiesce."

Nov. 17:

The Offspring, "Americana" — On its follow-up to the multiplatinum "Ixnay on the Hombre," The Offspring used America's daytime talk-show culture as inspiration. Expect more of the same from The Offspring on "Americana," which is not a bad thing.

Ice Cube, "War" — "War" is the first of a two-part epic being released by Ice Cube. Much like its title indicates, "War" is said to be dark and aggressive, much like his earlier release, "Death Certificate." The second half of the album will represent Ice Cube's calmer side on "Peace," which will be released in the spring.

Coming soon:

Local ska favorite, Ruskabank, will release its first studio album sometime this fall. The album, inspired by the band's many local fans, does not have a release date yet.

Another local band, Ultimate Fakebook, is in the process of mixing its follow-up to "Electric Kissing Party." This album probably will be released in the spring.

Students help restore historic theater

BY AMANDA EWING
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An overabundance of old buildings forces some communities to tear down the eyesores and construct new, modern buildings. Many communities, though, are realizing their historical importance and are doing what they can to preserve them.

Coffeyville, Kan., is trying to preserve and restore its historic downtown buildings. The Midland Theatre is the focus for a future renovation, and K-State interior architecture students are helping to make the renovation more successful.

The Midland Theatre is the semester project for the fifth-year interior architecture design studio classes. The project includes meetings with city officials in Coffeyville as well as visual and oral presentations.

Jim Dubois, associate professor of interior architecture, said Coffeyville would like to restore the theater to its original condition. It was built in the 1920s and was used for vaudeville acts and movies. A remodeling effort in the 1950s added a concession stand and a larger screen, which prevented live performances. The theater showed movies until February of this year.

The students were presented with the task of designing a proposal that will restore the theater to its original condition as well as add current technologies in light and sound.

"Many of these types of buildings were major forms of entertainment in community cultural centers," Dubois said. "They want to restore the building and bring back live productions, community theater, musicals, off-broadway productions, as well as use the space for business meetings."

The students' proposals serve as stepping stones for the community when actual renovations begin. They provide ideas for the client when a firm is hired. The experience also enhances the students' educations, Dubois said.

"The point is educational experience, not to provide a professional service," Dubois said. "Beyond that is icing on the cake. The clients are also learning and understanding the design process, but the primary objective is to provide education for the students."

The project encompasses many new aspects for the students. Along with the visual and oral presentations, they also must explore how much their proposed renovations would cost.

"This is the first project for which we've had to turn in a budget," said Jennifer Snapp, fifth-year interior architecture student. "We have to give them a projected cost. It requires a lot more research on specific features."

Another challenge is incorporating a second building, which is next to the theater, into the design. Vacant and gutted now, it will be used to house support facilities such as dressing rooms, green rooms and costume storage.

Dubois said the project is a good way for students to learn how to work with real facilities and clients.

"In a firm, they'd interact one on one with clients," Dubois said.

"Their proposals get them involved with clients and help them to understand the politics of a community."

UPC accepting entries for Student Art Show

Cash awards will be given to winners, show runs Oct. 19 - Nov. 7

BY JENNI LATZKE
KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY

Does your mother still have drawings you made in kindergarten on her refrigerator at home? Do your doodles impress strangers? Are you in need of cash?

If so, display your artistic talent in the Union Program Council's annual Student Art Show, starting Oct.19 and running through Nov. 7.

Students don't have to be art majors, or even students, to enter.

UPC Program Adviser Teto Henderson said that K-State students are encouraged to enter their two- or three-dimensional art as well as their graphic designs for a chance at a cash award for best in show. First prize is $30 cash, and second prize is $20.

Exhibits can be entered at the UPC Office on the third floor of the K-State Student Union between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. through Friday. Maxine Jevons, administrative assistant to UPC, will accept entries.

Henderson said a $3 entry fee will be charged to be used for prizes. All entries will be returned to their owners after the exhibit.

"Last year, we got overwhelmed," Henderson said.

"We had about 40 to 50 entries."

The show has yet to select a panel of judges for the exhibition, Henderson said.

He said judges will be chosen at-large from students and art professors.

Patriots destroy Chiefs, 40-10

BY HOWARD ULMAN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FOXBORO, Mass. — After two narrow victories against mediocre teams, the New England Patriots wanted to make a statement. They did it, loudly, against one of the best.

Robert Edwards made history and Drew Bledsoe made a shambles of Kansas City's highly touted but totally horrid defense as the Patriots routed the Chiefs 40-10 Sunday.

"To go out and beat a team like that really sets a standard for our team," Patriots wide receiver Terry Glenn said after Kansas City's worst loss in four years. "It shows people around the league what kind of team we have."

It's the kind of team that outgained Kansas City, which had the NFL's best defense, 438 yards to 134, and led 27-0 at halftime after needing late rallies to beat Tennessee and New Orleans.

"We played probably as good as we can play against a good team," Bledsoe said.

Edwards, the rookie runner who replaced Curtis Martin, became the first player since the 1970 NFL-AFL merger with touchdowns in his first five pro games. Bledsoe threw three scoring passes.

The Patriots defense held Kansas City to 14 yards rushing, the second-fewest in its history. The Patriots rushed for 206 yards and held huge advantages in first downs, 31-9, and time of possession, 41:48-18:12.

"Nobody expected anything like that," Patriots cornerback Ty Law said.

The Patriots (4-1) scored on seven consecutive possessions after punting on their first one as Edwards and Ben Coates each scored twice and Adam Vinatieri kicked four field goals. They broke a tie for the AFC East lead with Miami, which plays at Jacksonville on Monday night.

The Chiefs (4-2) suffered their worst loss since Oct. 30, 1994, when they were beaten at Buffalo 44-10. They helped the Patriots with a fumble, a roughing-the-passer penalty and two fourth-down failures.

"We made enough errors to last a season," Kansas City coach Marty Schottenheimer said. "This is the best football team we've played all season."

The Chiefs, using Elvis Grbac instead of Rich Gannon at quarterback for the first time in five games, were stopped cold one week after overcoming a torrential downpour to beat Seattle 17-6.

"I don't think there's any area of the game we didn't feel good about," Patriots coach Pete Carroll said. "Even the sun came out."

Grbac didn't blame the early deficit that forced the Chiefs into a predictable throwing attack, saying, "As a quarterback, you're asked to do whatever the situation is."

Kansas City began the game with the NFL's best pass defense, allowing 129.6 yards per game, and best overall defense, giving up an average of 240. By halftime, Bledsoe has 174 yards passing and the offense had 246.

Not even Derrick Thomas, who began the day tied for the AFC lead with seven sacks, could help.

"Any time you go on the road against a great team, you have to play mistake-free football, but instead, we made mistake after mistake after mistake," he said.

Braves salvage Game 4, 8-3

BY BERNIE WILSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO — Just in time, Andres Galarraga and the Atlanta Braves solved San Diego's pitching.

With the Braves facing elimination and trailing in the seventh inning, Atlanta rallied for six runs, capped by Galarraga's 459-foot grand slam, and beat the Padres 8-3 Sunday in Game 4 to avoid an unthinkable sweep in the NL championship series.

After postseason hero Jim Leyritz hit a solo homer in the sixth that put the Padres ahead 3-2, Javy Lopez tied it with a leadoff home run in the seventh.

The Braves went on to load the bases with two outs before Galarraga, who had no RBIs and just one single in his 12 previous at-bats this series, unloaded.

The Big Cat stood at home plate and watched his ball sail into the seats in left-center, hushing the crowd of 65,042 that had come to celebrate.

Ozzie Guillen, who started at shortstop because Atlanta manager Bobby Cox thought he could get something going, was on third base and turned to watch Galarraga's shot sail away. He threw his hands in the air as he headed for home.

Padres pitching proved to be mortal after all, from starter and loser Joey Hamilton to relievers Randy Myers and Dan Miceli, who allowed Galarraga's slam. Atlanta, batting just .200 in the first three games of the series, finished with 12 hits.

Even the Padres knew it wouldn't be that easy to sweep the Braves. Now, after a good effort from Denny Neagle, Atlanta will come back Monday night with the first of its Big Three pitchers.

John Smoltz will start for the Braves and the Padres will counter with Andy Ashby. Both pitchers got no-decisions in Game 1, a 3-2, 10-inning win for the Padres Wednesday night in Atlanta.

No team has ever come back from a 3-0 deficit in playoff history. If the Braves can get past Monday night and take the series back to Atlanta, its other two Cy Young pitchers, Tom Glavine and Greg Maddux, will be ready to go.

Galarraga hit 44 homers this year but only two in September and none in October until Sunday. His shot came on a 1-0 pitch off Miceli, who had come up big in clutch situations earlier in the playoffs.

Yankees head back to New York leading series against Indians

BY TOM WITHERS
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND — The Yankees came to town distracted, in disarray and near disaster. They're heading home in control and in reach of their next goal — a trip to the World Series.

David Wells pitched well enough to win, Chili Davis drove in three runs and Mariano Rivera got out of a hairy eighth inning Sunday as the Yankees defeated the Cleveland Indians 5-3 to take a 3-2 lead in the AL championship series.

New York saved its record-setting season with two wins this weekend at Jacobs Field, where its season ended last year. Now, the Yankees are one victory away from the season's final destination and the only place their fans will allow their magical year to finish.

"I'm very proud of this team," New York manager Joe Torre said. "Every time they've been faced with a challenge they've responded."

And for all his griping about the urgency to flee the Bronx and build a new ballpark, even New York owner George Steinbrenner will be happy to see the old neighborhood again.

Now the Indians, whose lineup looked more like the Triple-A Buffalo Bisons than the defending AL champs, face the awesome task of trying to win twice in Yankee Stadium.

The Yankees, who won 62 home games during the regular season, will start David Cone on Tuesday in Game 6 against Charles Nagy.

"We've got to win two," Cleveland manager Mike Hargrove said. "It's going to be tough. As I've said a thousand times before, you don't win 114 games by being lucky. These guys are good."

Rivera, who gave up the eighth-inning homer to Sandy Alomar here last year in Game 4 that swung the series to Cleveland, this time got his team to the ninth.

After Wells was pulled with one out in the eighth and New York leading 5-3, Jeff Nelson came on and hit Travis Fryman. Manny Ramirez singled and Torre summoned Rivera, who was also brought in with one out in the eighth last year before yielding Alomar's homer.

This time was different, though. Rivera got Mark Whiten to hit into an inning-ending double play that brought the Yankees charging out of the dugout.

Buy
You want a computer but you don't want to spend a lot. You go to Computer Renaissance, see the great prices and notice how the store doesn't resemble a garage sale at all. You smile, approach a highly qualified Computer Renaissance person and get just the computer you want, warranty and all, and you have enough left over for hula lessons...or whatever.

Service
If your printer is pooping out or your monitor's got you miffed, call us. If you have a question that only a computer expert can answer, call us. If you want to know if our refrigerator is running...please, don't call us.

Trade
Your computer just can't keep up with your pace. It's is in great shape, but you need more. You don't want to spend a lot to upgrade so you go to Computer Renaissance. You approach a knowledgeable staff member, give him your used computer, a little cash and he gets you the perfect upgrade. You're so happy you could sing. But you have a really bad voice so you don't.

Two women who allegedly helped the two men dump their bloody clothing, reported them to police, reportedly telling them the men made anti-gay remarks. Chastity Vera Pasley, 20, and Kristen Leann Price, 18, were charged with being accessories after the fact.

The two men never set out nearly to kill Shepard, but McKinney was embarrassed that Shepard flirted with him in front of his friends, Price and McKinney's father told the Denver newspaper.

Price said she and Pasley initially lied to police about the whereabouts of their boyfriends Tuesday night but said none of the four hate gays.

"It wasn't meant to be a hate crime," she said. "They just wanted to rob him."

The elder McKinney said there's no excuse for the crime, but the media had blown the story out of proportion.

"Had this been a heterosexual these two boys decided to take out and rob, this never would have made the national news," he told the Post. "Now my son is guilty before he's even had a trial."

Shepard's parents said in a statement Saturday that if their son could speak, he would "emphasize he does not want the horrible actions of a few very disturbed individuals to mar the fine reputations of Laramie or the university."

"He is a trusting person who takes everyone at face value and does not see the bad side of anyone," the statement said.

"His one intolerance is when people don't accept others as they are."

A close friend, Alex Trout, said he was surprised Shepard was targeted for attack because of his sexual preference, as police believe. Trout said his own homosexuality has never caused a problem in his four years in Laramie, a Western-tinged college town with a population of 27,000.

"In a sense (Wyoming) is 'red neck,' but it's not so bad gays can't live here," Trout said.

"Most of Wyoming has an attitude of live and let live," said Joe Corrigan, cofounder of United Gays and Lesbians of Wyoming.

Residents of what is nicknamed the Equality State agreed.

Heather Dunmire, a 20-year-old student who knew the two accused men, said the state doesn't deal with homosexuality as much as other areas, "but I don't think we're completely in the back woods."

"Wyoming should not be judged on these four jerks that did this," said Dunmire, who grew up in Rock River, 35 miles northwest of Laramie.

"I think it was a handful of individuals that can be found anywhere that did this," said Jeff Scott, 38, a 21-year Laramie resident. "It doesn't have to do anything with the state or a city or anything else."

The beating of the 5-foot-2, 105-pound Shepard came just before National Coming Out Day, which was Sunday, and on the heels of an advertising campaign by so-called family values groups urging gays to renounce homosexuality.

"I hope this is a wake-up call," said Terry Summers of Lambda Community Center, a Fort Collins, Colo.-based gay rights group, who joined fellow activists nationwide in calling for hate-crime legislation.

Shepard, who left Wyoming as a teen to finish high school in Switzerland, overcame worries about coming back to attend the University of Wyoming.

"He had a lot of the same fears other people have coming into a small community," Walt Boulden, a graduate student, said.

"When he left Wyoming he had just started dealing with being gay. So he was very concerned about the attitudes when he first came back.

"But he really felt at home and comfortable here. He felt this was the place to be right now."

Milosevic "is not in compliance as of this point."

"He can come into compliance or he can face military action by NATO" at any time, Berger said.

The Americans and Europeans are demanding that Milosevic halt the crackdown he launched Feb. 28 against the separatist Kosovo Liberation Army.

The major obstacle appears to be Holbrooke's demand that Milosevic agree to an expanded international monitoring mission to verify compliance with demands of the U.N. Security Council.

Those demands include an immediate cease-fire, a withdrawal of special troops in the province, allowing refugees to return home and beginning talks with ethnic Albanians on Kosovo's future.

Kosovo is a province of Serbia, the main republic of Yugoslavia. About 90 percent of its 2 million people are ethnic Albanian, and most of them want independence or substantial self-rule.

The Pentagon is continuing military preparations if Holbrooke's mission fails. Six U.S. B-52 bombers arrived in Britain on Sunday and a contingent of A-10 antitank planes flew from Germany to Italy.

On Sunday, Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., warned that Americans would be killed in the bombing raids. "There will be significant jeopardy there, because the Serbians have a very good defense system," the former Navy pilot said on "Fox News Sunday."

In Bucharest, the Romanian government agreed to allow NATO to use its airspace in "emergency and unpredictable situations" if the alliance launches airstrikes against Yugoslavia.

Holbrooke called the situation "very serious" and said he was looking for "peaceful, acceptable" alternative to the use of force.

After a late-night session with Milosevic, an exhausted-looking Holbrooke insisted early Sunday "nothing has changed" in the Yugoslav leader's stand. Holbrooke called the situation "very serious" and said he was looking for "peaceful, acceptable" alternative to the use of force.

A statement from Milosevic's office, issued after the talks, said all U.N. conditions have been met for a political settlement. But Milosevic seemed to be separating U.N. demands from the U.S. insistence on verification.

Serb sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Milosevic has refused to budge on a monitoring force. Washington is pressing for that because Milosevic has broken promises in the past.

A source close to Milosevic indicated that he was ready to comply with other conditions.

International efforts to end the seven-month crisis have accelerated following allegations that Serb police massacred scores of ethnic Albanian refugees. Concern is mounting that winter will bring a humanitarian disaster if thousands remain homeless by the first snowfall.

The United Nations has condemned recent massacres of ethnic Albanians but has not endorsed airstrikes.

Riley County Police Department Sgt. Stanley Conkwright said larger department stores are targeted more often. Employee training and awareness of suspicious behavior are effective in combating shoplifting. Other deterrents include setting up merchandise where it is unattractive to a shoplifter and enforcing penalties.

In many cases, cameras are not used in prosecution but instead to spot suspicious behavior so a store employee can observe the person.

"Cameras bring it to the attention of the security person," City Attorney William Frost said.

John, loss prevention supervisor at JCPenney, dresses as a customer to catch shoplifters.

Company policy requires the shoplifter to leave the store before being confronted about the theft. He declined to comment on what attracts his attention to a potential shoplifter.

"We catch professional people — we catch all kinds," he said. "It doesn't matter."

He said thieves normally try to find blind spots in the surveillance cameras. Cameras and walking the floor are both used to catch criminals.

"Even if they have the money to pay for it, they take it, because it's in style or fashion," he said.

Shoplifters also strike on campus. Items as large as an Iomega Zip Drive have been stolen from the K-State Union Bookstore.

When a shoplifter is caught, the K-State police are called.

Bookstore assistant director Kay Farley said as many as five shoplifters are detained each month.

"I think everybody who is a consumer should take an active responsibility," she said.

"If they see someone stealing, they should let the staff know."

Getty said if people understood how they would be harmed by the consequences, shoplifting might not be so prevalent, and they might think twice before stealing.

"One of the things students need to know is that there are penalties that will follow them, and there will be a misdemeanor on their record. That doesn't reflect well with employers," Getty said.

"This is not a minor thing."

American Red Cross Blood Drive ✚

OUT FOR BLOOD: CATS WIN BACK TROPHY

By JENNI LATZKE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-Staters donate 960 pints of blood during week, regain traveling trophy from Jayhawks

K-State students won the battle of the schools during last week's American Red Cross Blood Drive. K-State donated 960 pints of needed blood; the University of Kansas only donated 628 pints.

"More than 1,000 Wildcats came in to donate," said Nancy Powell, Red Cross Donor Resource Consultant for North Central Kansas. "The 960 are only those that were able to give."

She said there are always some potential donors who are deferred for health reasons.

K-State lost the traveling trophy to KU last year, only donating 879 pints. The Red Cross said even though there was a dip in last year's figures, it sees an overall increase in the amount donated.

"We're always trying to increase the amount given every year," Powell said. "We're always in need of O positive and O negative blood types, as well as others."

The blood drive lasted from Oct. 5-9. Students and faculty could donate at Putnam Hall, the K-State Student Union or at Trotter Hall during the drive.

"The majority of donations were students, but we also had some faculty and staff participate as well," Powell said.

Annie Jensen, junior in animal science, was a student who gave up her time and blood to support the cause.

"I did it because it's for a good cause, and it's nice to know I might have saved someone's life," Jensen said.

Jensen was no stranger to the needle — this was her eighth time to donate blood.

"It's really easy and not all that painful," she said.

All of the blood collected during the drive will be used in hospitals in the Central Plains Region, which covers most of Kansas and northern Oklahoma.

"Some of the blood given by students may go back to their hometowns, if they are from our region," Powell said.

"Manhattan was served, also Dodge City, Wichita and others."

Powell said the Red Cross' goal is to collect 1,800 units of blood each week for their region. K-State's donation accounted for almost half of that goal.

The next blood drive will be in the spring, during the week of March 1.

"We're hoping that everyone who donated will come back in March and help K-State keep the trophy," Powell said.

NATO gives go-ahead to U.N. airstrike

By RAF CASERT
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRUSSELS, Belgium — The NATO alliance today authorized airstrikes against Yugoslavia, possibly as early as this weekend, NATO Secretary-General Javier Solana said.

Despite progress in talks between American envoy Richard Holbrooke and Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic, the allies approved strikes in four days unless the Yugoslav leader ends his crackdown on ethnic Albanians in Kosovo province, Solana said.

"We have to maintain this pressure," Solana told a news conference after a meeting of the NATO ambassadors.

In New York, President Clinton said NATO had agreed to hold off on airstrikes for four days to allow time for international inspectors to verify Milosevic has met his commitments to withdraw forces from Kosovo and initiate peace negotiations with Kosovo's ethnic Albanians.

Clinton said Milosevic had agreed to allow a team of international inspectors to verify the troop withdrawal and the return of refugees to their homes, among other conditions set forth by the U.N. Security Council.

The president said Milosevic's words now must be followed by deeds.

"Commitments are not compliance," Clinton said in unscheduled remarks after a campaign fund-raising event. "Balkan graveyards are filled with President Milosevic's broken promises."

Before Solana's announcement, Holbrooke had briefed NATO ambassadors on the status of his talks with Milosevic. According to Solana, Holbrooke had reported there had been progress, largely due to the pressure of the alliance to use the threat of military

Street might add center-turn lane to increase safety

By TIM RICHARDSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

North Manhattan Avenue might receive a facelift soon to make the corridor safer for pedestrians and cyclists.

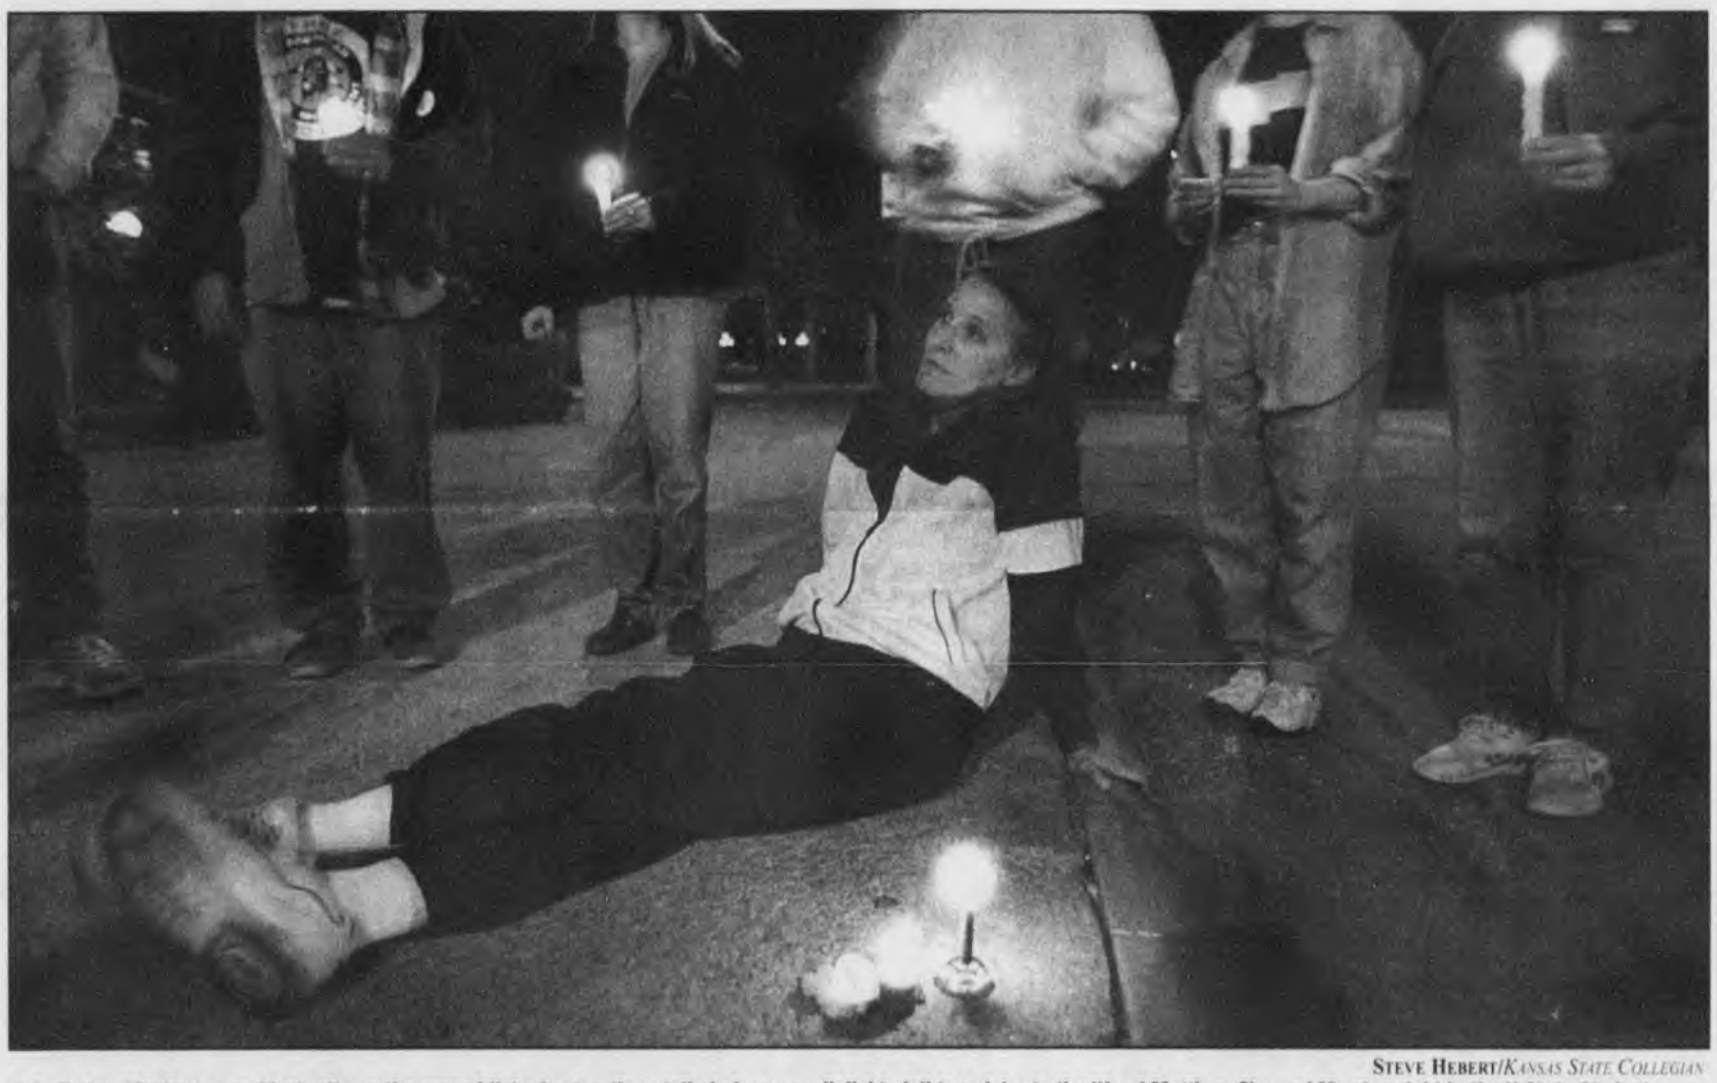
The four-lane street would be converted to three lanes, including a center left-turn lane, and bikeways would be added to each side of the avenue. Pedestrians would have fewer lanes of traffic to cross when going to and from campus.

■ OUR OPINION
The Collegian editorial board says steps need to be taken to make North Manhattan Avenue safer.
See Page 4.

The plan still needs approval from the Manhattan City Commission.

"We hope it will increase pedestrian safety and decrease speed just a little bit," Ron Fehr, assistant city manager, said.

The improvements would include North Manhattan Avenue from Bluemont Avenue to Claflin Road. An engineering firm that studied the area concluded the street could be converted to three lanes and have little effect on traffic flow.



"It would have a minimal effect on traffic, except to slow it down a little bit, which is beneficial from a pedestrian's perspective," Fehr said.

He said many of the accidents that occur along the corridor happen because the driver in the inside lane does not see the pedestrian when the driver in the outside lane is stopped.

Student Body President Tracey Mann said recent

REMEMBERING A LIFE

STEVE HEBERT/KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

D.L. Taylor, Manhattan resident, sits on the ground listening to others talk during a candlelight vigil to celebrate the life of Matthew Shepard Monday night in the K-State Student Union free-speech zone. Shepard, a homosexual 21-year-old University of Wyoming student, died Monday after being severely beaten. The Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Society will have a memorial service at 6 p.m. Thursday in All Faiths Chapel.

Student dies from injuries inflicted during attack; 2 face murder charges

By ROBERT W. BLACK
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Police said that with Shepard's death, the charges against them will be upgraded to first-degree murder, which carries a possible death sentence.

LARAMIE, Wyo. — A gay college student who was lured from a campus hangout, beaten and lashed to a split-rail fence, died Monday, and the two young men arrested in the attack now face murder charges that could bring about the death penalty.

Matthew Shepard, 21, died at Poudre Valley Hospital in Fort Collins, Colo., while on life support. His skull was so badly smashed that doctors could not perform surgery, hospital president Rulon Stacey said.

The University of Wyoming student had been in a coma since bicyclists found him in near-freezing temperatures Wednesday evening. At first, they mistook him for a scarecrow.

The attack has spurred calls nationwide for hate-crimes legislation protecting gays. President Clinton pressed Congress to expand the federal hate-crimes law to cover offenses based on disability or sexual orientation.

"Americans will once again search their hearts and do what they can to reduce their own fear and anxiety and anger at people who are different," Clinton said. "and I hope that Congress will pass the hate-crime legislation."

Russell Arthur Henderson, 21, and Aaron James McKinney, 22, originally were charged with attempted murder, kidnapping and aggravated robbery. They were jailed on $100,000 bail each.

Police said that with Shepard's death, the charges against them will be upgraded to first-degree murder, which carries a possible death sentence.

Their girlfriends — Chasity Vera Pasley, 20, and Kristen Leann Price, 18 — were charged with being accessories after the fact. Police said the women helped dump bloody clothing and initially lied about their whereabouts.

Police said robbery was the main motive but that Shepard apparently was chosen in part because he was gay. The 5-foot-2, 105-pound Shepard had been beaten twice in recent months, attacks he attributed to his homosexuality.

In a statement issued by the hospital, Shepard's mother, Judy Shepard, urged parents to enjoy every day with their children.

"He came into the world premature and left the world premature, and they are most grateful for the time they had to spend with Matthew," the hospital president said.

Of the 41 states that have hate-crime laws, 21 states specifically cover offenses motivated by the victim's sexual orientation. Efforts to pass a hate-crime law in Wyoming have failed several times.

Monday, the giant rainbow flag that symbolizes the gay movement was lowered to half staff in San Francisco's Castro District. College students rallied in downtown Denver to remember Shepard and denounce violence. In Laramie, where the long-planned Gay Awareness Week began, some students wore yellow and green armbands to send a message of peace.

"It's a great loss to everyone, whether they knew him or not. He was an incredible individual," said Jim Osborn, a friend of Shepard's and chairman of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgendered Association, a University of Wyoming student group.

"To beat somebody and tie them to a fencepost and beat them some more, obviously you're trying to make a statement," said Erik Abbott, a 25-year-old University of Wyoming student. "Obviously, these people felt this was the feeling of the community as a whole, and it's not."

Authorities have withheld many details in the case, and a judge is considering a prosecutor's request to seal the records.

Police said the two men lured Shepard out of the Fireside bar late Tuesday evening or early Wednesday morning by telling him they were gay. The three of them got in McKinney's truck, where the beating began, police said.

A funeral is being planned for Saturday in Casper, where Shepard was born, and a campus memorial service is being planned.

Candelight vigil remembers life of Wyoming student

By ANDY D. WIMMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students and Manhattan area residents gathered in the K-State Student Union free-speech zone to celebrate the life of Matthew Shepard, the 21-year-old University of Wyoming student who died Monday after being severely beaten.

Melissa Rodenbeek, an instructor in the PILOT program on campus, organized the the candlelight vigil.

"I didn't want to be alone tonight," she said. "I knew others would not want to, either."

Rodenbeek said that, hopefully, the attention Shepard's death is bringing to the issue of tolerance of different lifestyles will bring about change the local and national levels.

"With the death of this young man so close to the age of students here on campus, they can understand how close to home this death really is," Rodenbeek said.

D. L. Taylor, Manhattan resident, said she was distraught over the incident.

"Look at all of the violence in hate in our world," she said. "Who do we blame, the politicians like Pat Robertson and the rest of the religious right? Who is responsible? They all are."

The Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Society will have a memorial service at 6 p.m. Thursday in All Faiths Chapel.

DAILY REWIND

Deadline looms for new voter registration

Students and others new to the Manhattan area only have a week to register for next month's general election.

Voter registration forms must be postmarked by Oct. 19 in order to vote on Nov. 3.

The election is an off-year, midterm election that will determine seats in the U.S. Congress and the Kansas Legislature in both the House and the Senate, as well as the race for Kansas governor.

Every seat in the House of Representatives is up for re-election every two years, said John Fliter, assistant professor of political science.

All of Kansas' congressional representatives will be up for reelection. Sen. Sam Brownback and Gov. Bill Graves also are running for re-election.

Anyone who is at least 18 years of age, a U.S. citizen and a resident of the state of Kansas can register to vote. Students can fill out the registration form at the Office of Student Activities in the K-State Student Union, at local Dillons stores and at several other locations throughout the city.

The registration form is a half sheet that requires voters' names and basic registration information.

"There is very little reason or excuse not to register to vote," Fliter said. "It takes so little time."

While every election is important, Fliter said the Nov. 3 vote has more importance when put in the context of President Clinton's impeachment inquiry.

Voters will decide which party has control; if the Republicans retain the majority or gain bigger numbers, that will have consequences for the impeachment proceedings, Fliter said.

He said it's important for students to take an interest in what the government is doing and to voice their opinions.

"I think it's an important civic responsibility or civic duty. Voting is one of the most important rights we have as citizens, and it's a way to express our preferences to the government," Fliter said.

Big 12 commissioner sees good times ahead

DALLAS — Significant issues facing college athletics include postseason football play, the future of the NCAA, and fairness and access to college athletics by some groups, including women, new Big 12 Conference commissioner Kevin Weiberg said on Monday.

"The challenge that lies ahead is tremendous," he said. "There are a handful of conferences that will help shape the future of college athletics and several major policy issues."

Weiberg expressed support for the bowl system and Bowl Championship Series, which begins next season.

"The American public wants to see a No. 1 vs. No. 2 game in college football," he said. "At the same time, members of this conference have a rich heritage of associations with several bowls, and we hope to continue to work through this structure."

Weiberg, deputy commissioner of the Big Ten, was selected Thursday as the second commissioner of the Big 12. A native of Anthony, Kan., and a graduate of K-State, Weiberg, 42, will assume full-time duties in January.

"As I went through the interview process," he said, "I saw a group of people around the table who sincerely want to see the conference work and move in the area of athletics.

"This included the presidents and chancellors of the Big 12 members. I saw people unified and ready for a great future," he said.

In his first news conference, Weiberg said he was grateful for the patience of administrators, media and the public.

"I had been traveling for five or six days before the announcement last Thursday," he said, "and I had to get home to inform my family of the decision and to take care of some conference business. The word had leaked out before I returned home, and my two daughters weren't speaking to me. But we are excited about moving to Texas."

Prize-winning studies helped spawn Viagra

Three Americans won the Nobel Prize in medicine Monday for discovering that the body uses nitric oxide gas to make blood vessels relax and widen — a finding that helped lead to Viagra and also could pay off in treatments for heart disease.

In addition, it has triggered research that could lead to new treatments for cancer and septic shock.

The prize, announced in Sweden, went to Robert F. Furchgott, Louis J. Ignarro and Dr. Ferid Murad. Furchgott, 82, is a pharmacologist at the State University of New York Health Science Center at Brooklyn; Ignarro, 57, is at the University of California at Los Angeles; and Murad, 62, is at the University of Texas Medical School in Houston.

They will split the $978,000 prize.

Cells in the body make nitric oxide, which, paradoxically, is also an air pollutant in auto exhaust. It is different from nitrous oxide, better known as laughing gas. The researchers discovered that the body's own nitric oxide acts as a signal, telling blood vessels to dilate. That lowers blood pressure.

The work already has inspired a treatment for dangerously high blood pressure in the lungs of infants. Babies breathe the gas.

"Now, finally this discovery can be put to use in treatment of numerous pathologies," said Ignarro, who was reached in Naples, Italy. "The future of pharmacology is in the creation of a superaspirin that will be fundamental in the prevention of heart attacks, of cardiovascular disease, of arteriosclerosis."

Scientists were surprised when Furchgott and Ignarro reported the findings in 1986. Nitric oxide was the first gas to be identified as a signal in the body.

"It was a sensation that this simple common air pollutant ... could exert important functions" in animals and people, said the Karolinska Institute in Stockholm, which awards the prize.

The gas makes blood vessels dilate by relaxing the vessels' smooth muscles. It can help trigger erection of the penis the same way, because the relaxation lets blood flow in. Viagra was designed to work by blocking an enzyme that interferes with nitric oxide's effect.

The prize-winning work contributed "a small piece of information" to the development of Viagra, said Mariann Caprino, spokeswoman for Viagra maker Pfizer Inc.

Democrats sense shift in election sentiments

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Three weeks before midterm elections, Americans disapprove by a 2-to-1 margin of the way Republicans are investigating President Clinton's conduct, according to a poll released Monday. A growing number said they trust Clinton more than the Republicans to deal with the nation's problems.

Democratic politicians, sensing a shift in public sentiment after two gloomy months, said they have renewed hopes about the Nov. 3 elections.

Republican politicians said they are content with their current approach: steadily pressing ahead with the impeachment inquiry, which appeals to their conservative voter base, while candidates appeal to swing voters in each district by talking about issues, not impeachment.

"My sense of the polling data is that the more knowledgeable people are about the (investigation's) details, the more likely they are to vote Republican," said Rep. John Linder, R-Ga., chairman of the Republican National Congressional Committee.

According to a poll released Monday by The Washington Post, more than half of voters, 51 percent, said they would vote for a Democrat in November's congressional elections, and 42 percent said they would support a Republican.

Clinton's standing in the polls has improved since early September with the release of a report from Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr.

Two-thirds of those polled by the Post, 67 percent, said they approve of the job the president is doing, up from 59 percent in early September.

An increasing number of people said they trust the president more than they do Republicans to cope with problems faced by the country. The margin was

Resident Assistant spreads her wings

Linda Kalkowski, junior in chemical engineering, puts on a bird costume before going to her Monday afternoon Chemical Analysis class in King Hall.

Kalkowski said wearing the costume was an incentive to get residents to donate their change. Kalkowski said she got all kinds of looks throughout the day.

The Penny War raised a total of $178.49 for the Community Sanctuary, a program that provides child care for parents on Saturdays. The money will be used to buy new supplies for the children. The fifth-floor residents raised $56.62.

Linda Kalkowski, junior in chemical engineering, walks back to her residence hall from Durland Hall after her 11:30 class Monday. Kalkowski, a resident assistant on the fifth floor of Goodnow Hall, had to wear the bird costume because her floor won the Penny War by accumulating the most positive points of any other floor in Goodnow Hall. Positive points were gained by people donating coin money; negative points were received if paper money was donated.

Parties clash as government enters 13th day without budget

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — White House and congressional budget bargainers intensified their talks on school spending and other issues Monday as Congress voted to keep the government open for two more days amid indications that a deal was near.

After more than five hours of negotiating between White House chief of staff Erskine Bowles and GOP leaders, House Speaker Newt Gingrich said a deal could be completed by nighttime and a package could be on the House floor by Wednesday.

"We've reached many tentative possible agreements, none of which count until we've finished up the whole thing," Gingrich said.

Twelve days into fiscal 1999, spending bills controlling about $500 billion worth of spending — nearly one-third of the federal budget — still were in play.

The Clinton administration has been demanding about $3 billion more, including $1.1 billion for hiring elementary school teachers plus money for dealing with climate change, aid to Russia and other proposals.

Republicans had been offering nearly $2.5 billion but with some different priorities. The GOP proposed $1.1 billion that states could use to hire teachers or take any steps they want to reduce class size. They were offering half the $46 million Clinton wanted for food safety and none of the $100 million he wanted for toxic waste cleanups.

Just three weeks from Election Day, President Clinton tried anew to keep his education demands in the public spotlight. Before leaving for a political fund-raising trip to New York, he prodded Republicans on an issue that polls show scores well for Democrats.

"I know there's an election coming, but members of Congress can return home to campaign knowing they put progress ahead of partisanship on the important issue of education," Clinton said.

"This president thinks that if he says something in the State of the Union it will be done," House Majority Whip Tom DeLay, R-Texas, said. "He hasn't lifted a finger."

Improvements needed on dangerous avenue

It is unfortunate that dramatic events are necessary to precipitate small change.

Last June, a K-State student came home from work, parked her car on the east side of North Manhattan Avenue and crossed the intersection between Manhattan Avenue and Old Claflin. She chose not to hike north through the jungle of hedges and weeds that occupy that side of the street in the summer; that would have brought her to the intersection and the stoplight. Rather, she chose to cross further south, nearer to where she had parked.

As she ventured onto that stretch of asphalt in front of the residence halls, northbound cars stopped to let her by; one southbound car did, too.

As the student stepped around the car stopped in the middle lane, she was struck by a car heading south. It was 5 p.m.; it was hot, and there was more than enough light to rule out poor visibility.

What caused this accident was a driver mistaking the car stopped in the middle lane for a car stopped to turn left. The driver proceeded, not knowing there was a pedestrian. The driver's view was obscured by the car in the middle lane.

It's unfortunate that a student was hit before the city of Manhattan began making some real changes about North Manhattan Avenue — arguably the toughest gauntlet to run on the campus.

What makes Manhattan Avenue a death trap is a combination of factors. A lack of stoplights and flashing pedestrian lights leaves drivers with little reason for caution. The hill between Old Claflin and Lover's Lane makes it difficult to spot crossing pedestrians soon enough. Low-hanging trees and poor lighting make it difficult to see pedestrians at night. To compound the issue, pedestrians often cross without making certain traffic is clear, often banking on the driver's ability to see them rather than their ability to see the driver.

Should the Manhattan City Commission approve a measure included in a recent study, North Manhattan Avenue will be changed into a three-lane street, including a central turning lane and bike lanes on either side of traffic. The result has been compared to Denison Avenue, where fewer accidents occur. It would prevent accidents similar to the one that occurred in June by eliminating confusion over who is turning and who is stopped legitimately.

It's good that the city is trying to improve the situation on Manhattan Avenue. However, the measure comes five years too late, and we are sorry it takes so many accidents before change can occur. In this case, we urge city officials not to take the cheap way out: Instead, they should consider making further improvements beyond repainting the street. It's apparent the three-lane conversion might increase traffic concentration rather than make it easier for pedestrians.

We need more lights, not necessarily street lights — although they wouldn't be unwelcome. Rather, we need traffic lights and traffic signals to caution drivers and to highlight crosswalks. A plan is in the works to put flashing lights on the Manhattan Avenue crossing at Thurston Street, and we urge the city to approve this measure as soon as possible.

Perhaps, through a more comprehensive approach, other accidents can be avoided.

Editor,

A few days ago, my 4-year-old daughter and I were walking into the K-State Student Union. Outside were two girls socializing and smoking. As we passed them, I heard, "Why is a kid on this campus?" I was going to say something back, but I was afraid my daughter would probably repeat it.

It is time that the young, single, here-to-have-a-good-time students such as these realize that non-traditional students make up a large portion of the student body. This includes people 24 and older, those who have been out of school for five years, graduate students and those of us who have families.

Our tuition and fees go to support K-State just as much as traditional students' do. If their guests are entitled to use the facilities that we all support, my daughter will also. Besides, I'm sure no one loves to watch Willie do push-ups more than my little girl.

NATURE'S FINAL STAND

Nothing is sacred in the pursuit of progress — even here in Kansas

VIEWPOINT

CHRIS PIATT

If Bob Ross were alive, the poor schmuck would be out of a job.

Ross was the nice, hippie painter with big hair who used to paint "happy little trees" on the Public Broadcasting System.

He was a brilliant creator of motel-room art, a gentle soul whose legacy lives on in reruns, if only because no one else can crank out a landscape so effortlessly in a half-hour segment.

Ross' greatest resource was nature's beauty. Happy trees, fuzzy grass and cheery vegetation were the stuff of which his dreams were made. Consequently, a rendering of the K-State campus would be, tragically, out of the question.

Our campus has a lot of holes in it right now. Most of them are zoned off by yellow tape. Big, loud machines that look like sight gags from Charlie Chaplin movies are stripping away green lawns, ripping out brush and cutting down trees.

Meanwhile, we students are walking across campus sharing insights like, "Wow. That's really loud," and "When are they gonna finish this?" and "What are they doing, anyway?"

What are they doing, anyway?

The strangest element of the deconstruction of our campus is that no one seems to know what the hell is going on. Desensitized to the obstructive progress, we forget to ask why flora is being pulled up by its roots. We assume these guys are getting SOMETHING accomplished. We assume they have permits from the university. Everything is taken completely for granted.

Maybe all it takes to cut down a tree is some yellow tape and a chain saw. Perhaps any random student with a hard hat, a shovel and a dream can strip the grass from any of the campus lawns. No one wants to stand in the way of progress, and because we associate progress with the elimination of anything green, no one would question an impostor with a cement mixer.

In the meantime, imagine how startling it would be to walk across campus and see a taped-off work zone in which trees were being planted. That would attract real attention. Shoplifters are much less conspicuous than the plain clothes cops who are planted to catch them.

The American Midwest is practically a time warp. It is the final escape route for frustrated urbanites determined to find the last shreds of nature. Sure, Kansas is pretty much flat, and in the movies we usually look black and white and dusty. However, it is one of the last places left in America where one still can take a deep breath.

What the printed word does not need is one more tree hugging freak who exploits it to plead the case of Mother Nature. Even I know that without dead trees, this column would not exist. Spiking Wildcat trees would be an effort in vain.

So I am advocating asking questions. The folks who work for K-State tend to be pretty friendly, so try asking those nice guys behind the yellow tape why they are ripping up the land. They at least will give you an honest answer, and that's a start. Take nothing for granted. If you find the answer they give upsets you, maybe you should ask more questions. Follow it up. Then maybe you can act.

Bob Ross might have been the nicest person who ever lived. Certainly he was the nicest person who ever worked in mass media. It's a shame deforestation should make him turn in his grave.

With Manhattan vegetation adding to the equation, he's probably doing about 10,000 RPMs.

If you are not bothered by the situation at hand, savor it while you still can. Step outside, and take a deep breath. Now hold it.

Fear of aging strikes columnist at home, social settings

VIEWPOINT

MARY VANLEEUWEN

At age 18, we're supposedly adults. Despite this small legality, I never thought I would grow up and attain that defined, yet undefined, adult status. I don't know if I really want to.

However, as hard as I try to maintain a carefree, spunky life of revolution and silliness, I've been feeling my self grow older and more adultlike as the years go by.

It all started when I took out a loan for my first car when I turned 16. Then, when I moved away from home, and the bills really started coming, the responsibility grew. Finally, when I moved out of the scholarship house and had to buy all my groceries, I felt pretty self-sufficient. It's amazing how buying ramen noodles and macaroni and cheese can put you on maturation mode.

I saw myself growing up through the checks I kept signing. For me, the first step to settling down was becoming completely self-sufficient.

But I thought I'd never act old.

Unfortunately, I've taken note of an aging trend in my life. I'm becoming more and more grown-up. For example, drinking isn't as exciting as it used to be, I clip coupons, and I spend more time thinking about where my life is going than I spend thinking about what I'm going to do Saturday night.

Not only am I slowly starting to act like an adult, sometimes I feel old. Twenty years is a long time, when you think about it. I realized how old it must seem to my youngest sister, Chelsea, for example. Do you remember how old 20-year-olds seemed to you when you were 5?

I'm 20, and I'm already anticipating how loathsome it will be to feel my health deteriorate. Sometimes my paranoia gets the better of me, and I convince myself that my body's little pains are the beginnings of arthritis or a massive heart attack. My body is done growing, and now all that's left for it to do is to fall apart. If I don't start drinking more milk soon, my bones are going to disintegrate, and I'm going to break both my hips.

I'm not dead yet, but when I think about how long a lifetime can be, I begin to think that dying at age 55 wouldn't be so bad (unless I was really happy at age 55, then it would really suck).

It's taken me a long lifetime to reach 20. I only can imagine how slowly the time could go by after I settle down to my version of the American dream. In a year and a half, I'll be almost 22, and I could be looking for a job. One-and-a-half years until I'm playing with the big kids, in the real world that wants me to make money and wants to take money. I'll be expected to act grown up all the time, and I don't know if I can handle that. What happens if I think about Treasure Trolls during a meeting, and I get an uncontrollable giggle fit? What if there's an unspoken dress code? What if I lose my vision in life?

If I live to be 75, that gives me 53 years left to live. I really hope I don't get bored. Having a family would be entertaining, until my husband cashes in his male-life expectancy, and I'm all sad and alone while my kids pay my rest-home bills and then never come to see me. Then, all of a sudden, I'm being fed pureed food, I'm wearing diapers, and no one takes anything I say or think seriously because they think I'm old and incapable of thinking anymore.

This is making me really depressed. Old age isn't always like it is in the Depends commercials. Granted, some people can live to be 100 and still go bowling every Tuesday; I'm still a bit skeptical of what my body and spirit will be up to in 53 years.

Aging scares me. I guess there's no way to really know what's going to happen, and there's no way to stop it. I suppose I'll just have to deal with it, hope for the best, and work toward making the most out of what that crazy thing called life gives me.

Catholicism's structure makes finding truth easy

Editor,

I'm writing in response to Mary VanLeeuwen's column "Rigid Structure of Catholicism Suffocates Columnist."

I'll begin with the headline. Of course Catholic rituals seem meaningless to people who don't believe in God. That's because they are meaningless without God behind them. As VanLeeuwen noted, there are Catholics who believe in God and in the sacraments. For us, the "rigid structure of Catholicism" is not a cage. It's a ladder reaching to heaven. The structure makes it easier for us to find the truth, not harder.

The part of the column that really annoyed me, though, was the final paragraph. "Now, I see that I have more than enough unconditional love. I don't need God as an imaginary friend."

VanLeeuwen makes it sound as if religion is only something people cling to out of emotional need.

That isn't the case. There are other reasons to believe in God. The existence of anything implies a first cause — something started the world. Another word for that first cause is God. If God is the first cause, it follows that he is responsible for our existence, whether we believe in him or not.

Some people don't seem to believe in this sort of objective truth. However, I think Catholicism only can be understood or criticized in light of that sort of truth. VanLeeuwen said, "the only thing that matters is that you're a good person and that you're happy." But what does it mean to be a good person?

Who thought up the concept of "good?" C.S. Lewis, author of the Narnia books and one of the best-known theological writers of this century, argued that complaints such as "you took the bigger half of the cookie" or "that was my seat first" are proof of God. These complaints all suppose some concept of fairness, something that's right whether or not people believe in it. In other words, they presuppose the existence of an objective truth.

Another word for that truth is God.

If there is a God who made the world and exists no matter what we think of him, it's obvious that he doesn't exist just for our personal fulfillment. It's also obvious that he exists whether or not we find happiness worshiping him. In that case, a religion cannot be judged only on whether its members feel good about it. It must be judged on whether or not it has any relation to the truth. If the church has the truth, then it doesn't matter whether you get bored during the readings or if you're sick of singing the same alleluia. If the church is devoid of the truth, then there is no reason for anyone to stand in church and lie to themselves.

There is no middle ground. Either God exists, or he doesn't. Either a belief is right, or it's wrong. By implying that Catholicism is good only in as far as it makes people happy, VanLeeuwen has insulted it and anyone who believes the church is a way to the truth.

— Teresa Huffman, sophomore in pre-health professions

Union does not deserve penny of students' money

Editor,

To the campus community: You can write all you want about or to the K-State Student Union, that you would prefer it uses non-trashable utensils and plates, etc., but the fact of the matter is, it won't change.

It's been interesting to watch the metamorphosis in the Union Food "Service" over the last four years. Once upon a time, water was free. Now, even with your own reusable mug, the Union tries to charge you 15 cents if it's heated or frozen. One would think that with all the money it's saving by using throw-away plastic junk, prices would be lower this year than they were last year when it was using those oh-so-expensive real plates and forks.

Supposedly, the Union is on campus to "provide products, services and programs to enhance the quality of life of its students, faculty, staff, alumni and guests, with particular emphasis on the students." Perhaps a new mission statement of purpose should be constructed, one which would, in effect, read, "We don't try to act like the only place you can go on campus for food, but our poor service and high prices give us away."

You see, the Union is like any other monopoly. It doesn't care what you think as long as you keep giving it your money. Or maybe it just doesn't care what I think.

I have yet to receive a reply to any of the three comment cards I've filled out this year.

The bottom line is that the only thing it cares about is your money. The only way for change is to keep your money and tell the Union why you won't be spending any more of it there.

If you don't have time for such things, e-mail me at jansfre@ksu.edu and I'll bring you something to eat and sell it to you at cost, not $1 for a peanut-butter-and-jelly sandwich. That's ridiculous.

It's time to boycott the money-grubbing Union Food "Service" and regain a bit of our humanity instead of being forced into lines and led through gates like pigs to the slaughter while listening to terrible music.

Women's cross country squad takes 8th place in race

Wildcats defeat several top-25 teams, sophomore Annie Wetterhus places 20th

BY FRANK FLATON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's cross country team faced a field loaded with nationally ranked opponents Saturday at the Bob Timmons Invitational at Rim Rock in Lawrence. Regardless of their competition, the Cats finished strong and surpassed many of their top-25 challengers.

Taking eighth place in a competitive field, the Wildcats toppled five of the six ranked teams at the meet. No. 3 Stanford, who finished first, was the only ranked opponent to finish ahead of K-State. The women also beat all Big 12 conference opponents featured at the meet, including No. 9 Colorado and No. 16 Missouri.

"We might have turned a few heads at the meet," assistant coach Michael Smith said. "It didn't surprise us, though. We expect our girls to run at that level."

Leading the way for the Wildcats was sophomore runner Annie Wetterhus, who took 20th. Following her were junior runner Korene Hinds and freshman Amanda Crouse, who finished 32nd and 36th, respectively.

"The meet was very exciting," Wetterhus said. "It reaffirmed that we can do well this season, and I think we are going to. This shows that if we really work hard, we have the ability to run with anyone in the conference."

The Bob Timmons Invitational was an NCAA pre-meet — a preview of the NCAA championships, which also will take place Nov. 23 at Rim Rock. Thirty-two teams competed at the event.

Head coach Randy Cole said the team had a pretty good showing against tough competition.

"This gave us the chance to run with the big guns and see what we could do," he said. "Obviously, our women performed pretty well. It's exciting, because we could do even better."

Smith said he believed it was a solid meet, but the team still could improve quite a bit.

"If our fourth and fifth runners compete the way they are capable of running, we can improve," he said. "Since it wasn't a perfect race, we expect them to only get better."

Cole said this showing could build a lot of confidence in the team.

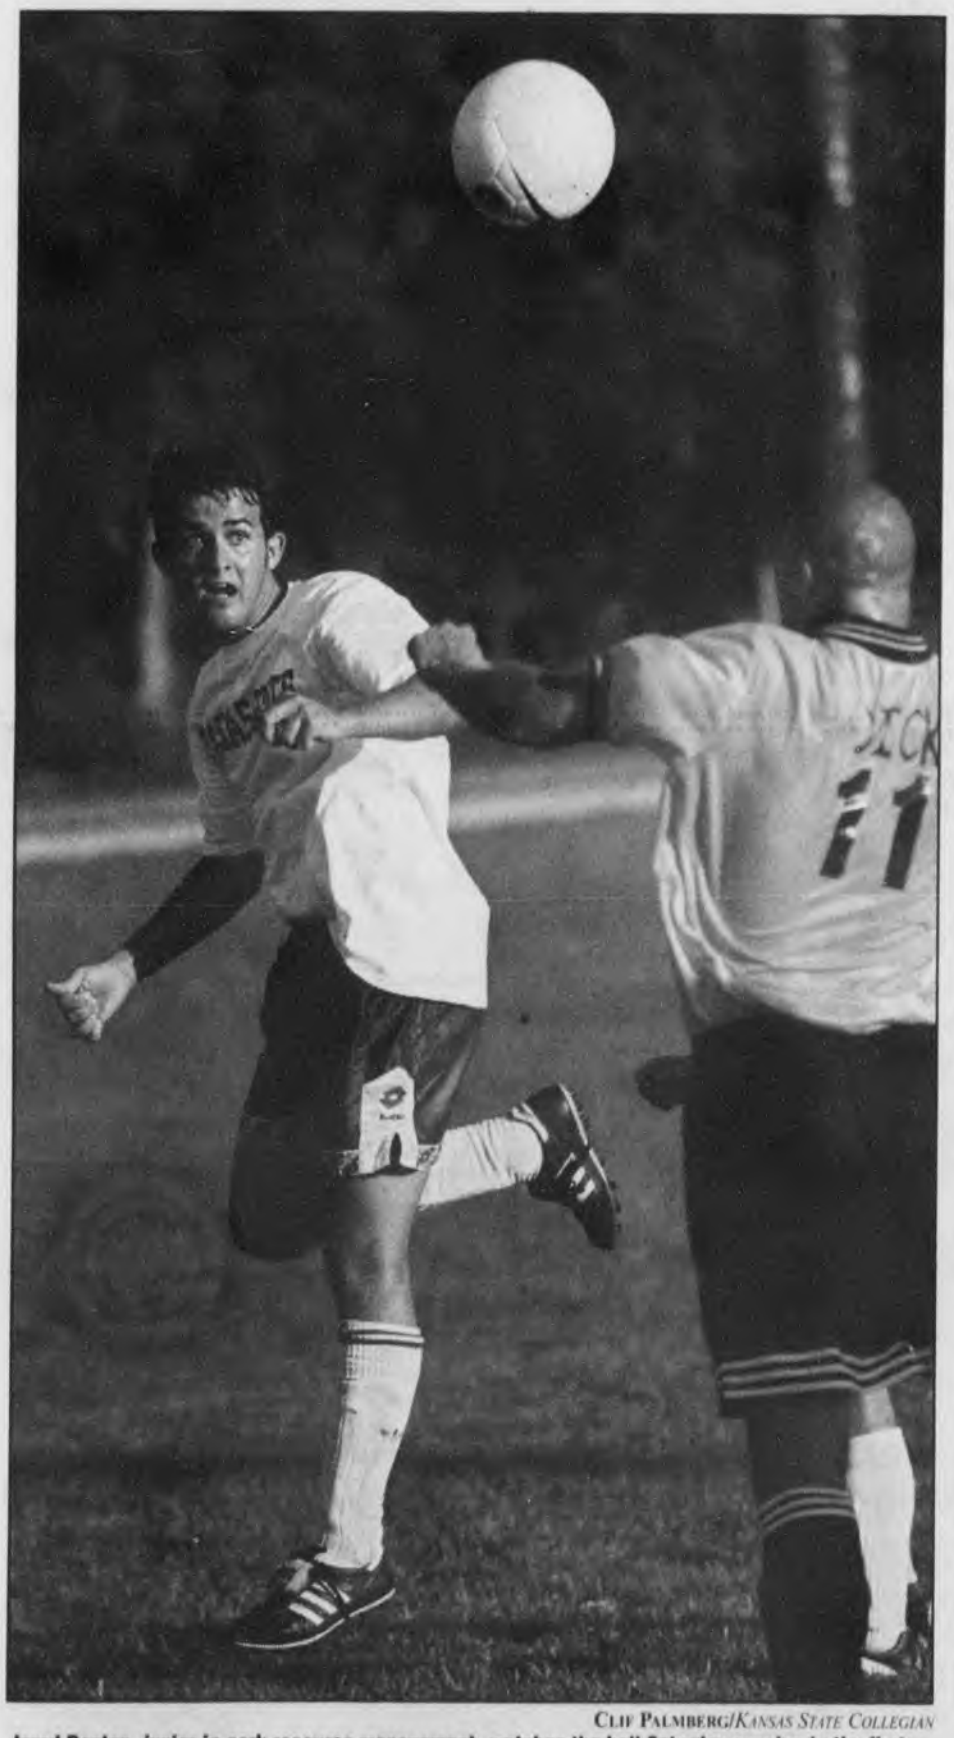
"It was a pretty good confidence boost for our girls," he said. "We are getting in shape to race with the top teams. We just have to keep rolling."

Wetterhus said the team is improving with each race.

"It seems like each race we're getting better and stronger," she said. "Hopefully, this meet got everyone excited and made them aware of the potential we have.

COLE

"We have to continue to work hard and get up for the big meets. If we run the way we are capable of, hopefully, we will be back at Rim Rock in November," Wetterhus said.



In the men's race, K-State placed 26th. Freshman Brandon Jessop capitalized on his first-place finish against UMKC on Sept. 25 by speeding to 36th place.

"The men did a better job of running closer together," Cole said. "They need to notch it up a whole lot so we can have good showings later on in the season.

"Individually they can race better. No ifs, ands or buts about it, they have to step up and compete at the level they are capable of. And as a whole, they are not doing that," he said.

K-State will take on national competition again on Saturday at the Auburn Tiger Invitational. After this meet, the Cats will compete for the Big 12 Championship crown on Oct. 31 in Lincoln, Neb., and the Midwest Regional Championship on Nov. 14 in Wichita.

■ Soccer team defeats Nebraska, Emporia State but loses to Kansas in Ed Chartrand Memorial Tournament.

BY SARAH CRAIG
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One goal kept K-State out of the semifinals of the Ed Chartrand Memorial Tournament last weekend. The team lost to the University of Kansas 3-1, then went on to defeat the University of Nebraska-Lincoln 8-2 and Emporia State 7-0.

Had K-State scored one more point, they would have been the wild-card team, proceeding to semifinal action.

The tournament opened with the game against the Jayhawks. The score of the game was tied at halftime, but KU scored first in the second half with a shot from outside right. K-State scored the second goal when player Michael Remis carried the ball up the middle and scored from the top of the box.

KU answered immediately, scoring with a header on a cross from the right side. This proved to be the go-ahead goal, as K-State never answered and KU scored again late in the second half.

K-State team president Eric Glover said he felt the teams were pretty evenly matched, but there were a few tactical areas needing improvement.

"We need to work on using the width of the field," Glover said. "We need to concentrate on marking stronger on defense and just keep working hard."

While the team was victorious in the following games, it wasn't quite enough to put them in the semifinals. Fort Riley was the wild-card draw and went on to lose to KU 4-3.

In the other semifinal, Wichita State lost to Iowa State, 7-1.

Tournament sponsor Art Chartrand said had K-State been in another bracket, it most likely would have played in the finals. He said keeping K-State and KU in the same bracket evens the competition.

KU won the tournament, defeating Iowa State 2-1.

The women's team lost its exhibition game Friday night against KU 1-0. The score was tied at halftime. KU scored in the second half, and K-State spent the rest of the half defending.

The tournament attendance this year was not as large as some in years past. Chartrand said that often there will be better attendance when there is bad weather and also that it's hard to draw a crowd in Manhattan.

"It's tough to compete with football," Chartrand said. "We don't do it for the purpose of crowds. We do it for the players, to offer some quality soccer.

"Until the day we have stadium facilities, it's hard to draw a crowd," he said.

The Chartrand Tournament awards a $500 scholarship to a member of the K-State men's club team. Glover received the award this year. Glover is both player and coach for the team. He said that overall, he was pleased with the team's performance.

"I think the guys kept their heads the whole time and did what needed to be done," Glover said. "The game against KU was one of the best games ever seen around here.

"We won our other games 8-2 and 7-0. I don't know how it gets much better than that."

The team will compete in regionals this weekend. The Cats will play Missouri, Iowa State and KU. The top-two teams from regionals move on to nationals.

Braves win Game 5, 7-6

BY BERNIE WILSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO — Michael Tucker and the Atlanta Braves did what they had to do to stay alive in the NL championship series, staging a stunning comeback against no less than Kevin Brown.

With the Padres just five outs away from reaching the World Series for the first time in 14 years, manager Bruce Bochy's strategy to bring on Braves-killer Brown blew up when Tucker hit a go-ahead, three-run homer that sent Atlanta to a 7-6 win Monday night in Game 5.

Bochy's move looked good in the seventh when Brown came on with a 4-2 lead, a runner on and no outs and retired the side. But now, after Brown faltered in just the third relief appearance of his career, the strategy will be heavily questioned.

Tucker's homer highlighted a five-run rally in the eighth that made it 7-4. Tucker drove in Atlanta's first five runs.

"It's a tough one, no question about it," Bochy said. "We said before the game, if we had a two-run lead, we'd use Brownie. He had three days rest.

"We had our best out there, but it didn't work out. Now, we just have to go back to Atlanta," he said.

Pinch-hitter Greg Myers hit a two-run homer in the ninth off Braves reliever Kerry Ligtenberg, and then Atlanta manager Bobby Cox made his own unusual move — bringing in four-time Cy Young winner Greg Maddux from the bullpen.

Maddux, who had not relieved since 1987, got three outs for the first save of his pro career.

Maddux struck out pinch-hitter Greg Vaughn, playing for the first time since straining his left quadriceps in Game 1, and retired Quilvio Veras on a grounder. After Steve Finley drew a rare walk from Maddux, the Atlanta ace got Tony Gwynn on a game-ending grounder.

Brown, who had been 6-0 with a 1.85 ERA in his last eight starts against Atlanta, was the loser. John Rocker won in relief.

Volleyball team sweeps pair of weekend matches

BY BRENT STOVER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The best cure for a two-match losing streak is to go out and hammer your next two opponents.

Just ask the K-State volleyball team.

The Cats swept a pair of matches over the weekend on the road at Iowa State and Missouri.

Friday night's win over Iowa State was hardly a contest. K-State drilled the hapless Cyclones, 15-2, 15-1 and 15-10. The Wildcats barely even broke a sweat, winning the match in just an 1 hour, 9 minutes.

"We came out and played very focused," Wildcat coach Jim McLaughlin said. "We just put tremendous pressure on them the whole time."

Dawn Cady hit a career-high .640, on her way to recording 17 kills to lead the Cats. The junior also chipped in with eight digs.

Val Wieck also had one of the best matches of her career, hitting .789 with 15 kills for the match.

With the loss, the Cyclones fell to 2-16 on the year. However, McLaughlin said he still held them in high regard going into the match.

"The best way to show respect is to come out and play your best and hammer the opponent," McLaughlin said.

Saturday night against the Missouri Tigers, K-State once again had little trouble doing what it wanted to do.

After a hard-fought first game, which the Cats won 15-13, K-State took control of the match.

K-State won the second game 15-8 and closed out the match with a 15-4 win in game 3.

"We felt that if we stopped their right side and served well, we'd win, and that's what we did," McLaughlin said.

Cady once again led the Cats with 13 kills to go along with 13 digs. Kelle Branting added 11 kills and hit .471 for the match.

Kim Zschau recorded just 11 kills for the weekend, but McLaughlin said he was quite pleased with what she did on the court.

"Kim really took control of the ball," McLaughlin said. "Every ball she could get to, she got to."

Even with the two wins over the weekend, McLaughlin said there are still important areas to improve on.

"We've got to work on our offensive calls," McLaughlin said. "We have to work on the timing and rhythm of our calls and on our defensive positioning."

K-State is now 10-5 on the season and 4-2 in Big 12 Conference play. After four-straight matches on the road, the Cats return home this weekend to take on Baylor and Texas Tech.

"When you start seeing the team play to its strengths, you start to see the pieces of the puzzle fit together," McLaughlin said. "It's just a good feeling."

The Red Reign is over in college football, K-State's purple looks better than ever

VIEWPOINT

D. Scott FRITCHEN

For a few magical seconds, harmony swept through Folsom Field. Purple people cheered. Shirtless Colorado students who were painted gold and black cheered. For a moment, more than 51,000 fans rejoiced, slapped high-fives and danced like munchkins outlining a golden path to Tempe, Ariz.

The Wicked Witch was dead.

Gone finally was the Red Reign's streak that once terrorized Big 8 Conference and Big 12 Conference teams, that crept into 40-straight conference games like a tornado and left broken hearts of opposing players scattered across ragged football fields.

The Red Reign fizzled Saturday. Eventually, it disappeared with a puff of purple smoke.

Nebraska's unmighty loss to Texas A&M in College Station, Texas, set up the perfect grudge match between K-State and Colorado.

What fans got was Ugly Saturday.

It was ugly because a week of trash-talking and bulletin-board holes erupted into an ugly game between two ranked teams. It was ugly because the fX cameraman couldn't follow the football. K-State's offense. Colorado's special teams. Five fumbles. Ugly. The last of 19 combined penalties helped preserve a 16-9 win during the final seconds.

Line judge Gary Brown thought he was throwing in the towel when he tossed out his last yellow hanky.

K-State players stumbled from the field, dejected like they had just played the Red Reign of a year ago. Someone should have told them they won their 13th-straight game.

I present to you the top team in the Big 12 North, No. 4 Kansas State.

We'll summarize the dramatics from the post-game news conference with this simple rule: Never quote a quarterback who talks about an as-told-to story related to a running back who might or might not have said he could run 80 yards on his first play of the season.

"To get away with a win," K-State coach Bill Snyder said during Monday's teleconference, "we were very fortunate."

Nebraska reminded fans donned in purple and black the fragility of records, streaks and everything gracious and holy that the critics use when guaranteeing victories.

Before Saturday, Nebraska secured the nation's best winning streak of 19 games. Texas A&M had lost 10 straight against top-10 teams.

K-State hadn't won in Boulder, Colo., for 25 years. Colorado had come from behind to win 11 of 18 games.

Numbers mean nothing.

Numbers mean everything.

They mean everything because it's believed K-State is ahead of Nebraska in the polls for the first time in school history. K-State rose to No. 1 in Jeff Sagarin's NCAA ratings this week, and although the Bowl Championship Series standings come out in November, the Wildcats furthered their progress toward a Fiesta Bowl national championship berth along with the Buckeyes, Bruins and Volunteers; all remained undefeated.

Then there is Nebraska.

"Many of these players have never had to deal with a loss," Nebraska coach Frank Solich said. "But we'll move on."

Nebraska still has a chance to play for the national championship.

Ask Snyder to comment on Nebraska's weekend of weakness and he'll hand you the no-doubt-they'll-bounce-back answer that people across the country nod their heads about. Never count Nebraska out of a national championship six weeks into the season.

Snyder arrived in Manhattan at 5 a.m. on Sunday. No time to think about Nebraska's loss. No time to read the newspaper.

Only time to reflect on the ugly game his team played several hours prior and to concentrate on one number that counts: six days before Oklahoma State.

Keep in mind, K-State gained its highest ranking in school history this week.

"I'd like to know when you have time to think about (celebrating)," Snyder said. "That would be a disaster while preparing for Oklahoma State."

Oklahoma State coach Bob Simmons will continue to study game tapes all week, comparing the team formerly known as Red Reign to K-State. Watching their offense. Watching their defense. Watching their special teams. Evaluating. Rewinding. Watching again. He quickly will realize what worries him the most about K-State.

"The whole team," he'll say.

"They are a darn good football team. They have a strong tradition of winning up there."

K-State's 13-game winning streak is the second longest in the nation behind UCLA.

K-State has won 43-straight games against unranked opponents at KSU Stadium.

The Red Reign has ended.

Nobody is safe.

Student designs lighting for 'Antigone'

■ Junior uses colored light to contrast gray costumes.

BY ERIN MCGLINN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When K-State Theater's "Antigone" opened last weekend, there was one student who had all the bright ideas behind the scenes of the adapted Sophocles tragedy.

Marilee Rose, junior in theater was the lighting designer for the play.

"My previous experience with theater mainly dealt with acting in high school," she said. "During my freshman year, I began to focus on technical work."

Through exposure to productions such as musicals and plays, Rose began to assist others in their lighting designs. She eventually took a lighting class, which enabled her to start some work of her own.

Rose said one aspect she enjoys is creating different effects with colored lights. She described a scene in which a blue light is shone down from one angle while a pink light is aimed from an opposite angle to develop a bright shade of white on the actors and actresses.

■ WANT TO SEE THE LIGHTS? 'Antigone' runs at 8 p.m. Oct. 14-17 in Nichols Theatre. Admission is $6 for students and seniors and $9 for the general public.

"I incorporated lots of warm color into the show as a contrast to the gray set and costumes," she said.

Throughout "Antigone," the entire cast is on the stage at all times.

"She does a good job of keeping the audience focused on the appropriate characters," said Brad Good, First Guard in "Antigone" and senior in theater. "She creates a mysterious looking stage by making shadows through the trees."

One character in the presentation is based on the Greek chorus, which is basically an all-knowing, omniscient role that serves as an objective point-of-view. Rose said she was challenged somewhat by this character, because she often had to isolate him from the rest of the stage by highlighting him with spotlights.

"It can be pretty difficult to light one person in this way," Rose said. "It sounds easier than it is."

The lights could not be placed until about a week before the production when the set and the movement of the characters on stage were finalized. Rose said she did a great deal of planning with Charlotte MacFarland, director of "Antigone," before she actually created her arrangement.

Once the lights were up, Rose said she made adjustments to them every night until the play opened.

"I had to do a lot of planning ahead, because I needed to have everything ready to go when it was time to do the final placement," she said.

Although faced with a big responsibility, Rose said she truly enjoys the experience and challenges associated with lighting design.

UPC to bring illusionist to Union to read minds

BY DIANA LEE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Craig Karges takes the phrase "mind over matter" literally.

At his 8 p.m. performance tonight in Union Little Theatre, audience members will be able to see why.

Melanie Tull, Union Program Council special events chair, said Karges, known for creating illusions and a sense of the paranormal on stage, has been called many different things.

■ MORE INFO? Karges is performing at 8 p.m. in the Union Little Theatre. Admission is free.

"He's often called a mentalist or an extraordinist," she said. "He reads people's minds and does a lot of tricks utilizing only his own mind."

Tull said many people have said he creates something close to a "Twilight Zone" for the stage.

It is important to Karges to note that he does not consider himself to be a magician.

"He doesn't like to be called a magician," Tull said. "He's not using tricks on stage. He's solely using his mind."

Tull said Karges is known for not using many props in his act.

"As far as we know right now, we'll just have tables available to him on stage, unless he brings anything else with him," she said.

"He is really focused on doing things with his mind and bridging the gap between the scientific and the supernatural," Tull said.

Karges is known, however, for utilizing his paycheck as a prop in one trick and for using only his mind to move objects such as tables in others.

Karges is planning to precede his performance in Derby Dining Center.

"He's going to do a little teaser show, probably about 15 minutes long, in Derby while people are there waiting for dinner to start, around 5:15 p.m. or so," Tull said.

Karges has appeared on such TV shows as the Tonight Show, Larry King Live and CNN Headline News, so his act might be familiar to some.

"A lot of people say they really enjoy him," Tull said. "I haven't had a chance to see him perform yet, but everyone who has says it's really cool."

Tull also said UPC will use tonight's turnout as a gauge of student interest when scheduling performers in the future.

"When he performed at Johnson County Community College they had a really good turnout, so we're hoping for the same," she said. "If we can get a lot of people to come Tuesday we would be able to have someone like this again."

'Just Shoot Me' actress handles divorce stress with laughter at work

LOS ANGELES — Newly divorced, Laura San Giacomo says the NBC sitcom "Just Shoot Me" helps lighten her load.

"To go to work and laugh every day is great medicine, and it's a great way to live," the actress who plays Maya Gallo told US magazine.

San Giacomo divorced actor Cameron Dye this year after eight years of marriage. Their son Mason, who is almost 3, often joins her on the set of the comedy about the ups and downs of a fashion magazine.

"She has tunnel vision on that kid," said David Spade, who plays tart-tongued assistant Dennis Finch. "That's why I like her, because she works really hard, and the second it's over, it's all kid." he said. "It's a lesson in parenting and growing up and everything that scares me in life."

Prince Charles donates signed, dated lithograph to benefit hospital

DUBLIN, Ireland — Prince Charles is donating one of his lithographs of Windsor Castle to benefit a hospital that treated victims of Northern Ireland's worst-ever terrorist attack.

The signed and dated lithograph will be auctioned Wednesday in support of County Tyrone Hospital in Omagh, where an Aug. 15 car bomb planted by Irish Republican Army dissidents killed 29 people and wounded 370.

"This is the first time a piece of art by Prince Charles has been auctioned anywhere in the world, so we have not placed a reserve price on it," said John de Vere White, Dublin's premier auctioneer of fine art.

Christie's London office has valued the lithograph at 2,000 to 3,000 British pounds ($3,400 to $5,100).

The heir to the British throne visited the hospital and the bomb-ravaged town three days after the attack.

Douglas receives Screen Actors Guild lifetime achievement award

LOS ANGELES — Kirk Douglas, who helped break the Hollywood blacklist in 1958, is the next recipient of the Screen Actors Guild's lifetime achievement award.

"In honoring Kirk Douglas, we pay tribute to a performer whose critically acclaimed achievements as an actor are matched by the strength of his personal character and integrity," SAG President Richard Mazur said in a statement Monday.

The award will be presented March 7.

Douglas has been nominated for three Academy Awards. In 1958, he insisted that credit be given to a blacklisted writer, Dalton Trumbo, for the screenplay of "Spartacus," a film in which he starred.

Walters denies wedding bells after New York Post report of nuptials

NEW YORK — After four failed marriages, Barbara Walters is sticking to her promise of never again.

Walters denied a newspaper report that she's tying the knot with Sen. John Warner, R-Va.

"It's just not true," Walters assistant Monica Caulfield said.

Wedding bells for the "20/20" anchorwoman were reported Monday by the New York Post.

Although Walters and Warner "have been friends for many, many, many years," Ms. Caulfield said they were not planning to marry.

New park improves land where homes once flooded

By JAMI STUMP
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The new Fairmont Park will improve the existing neighborhood and be eye-appealing for those entering Manhattan along Kansas Highway 177, said Ann Feyerharm, planner for Riley County planning, zoning and development.

After three years of work, the first part of a new park was dedicated Monday night. Located on the existing flood plain on the east side of the Kansas River, the park includes 110 acres of public land.

"We have tried to create a park that has uniqueness. The master plan that was developed has a lot of things that will allow for this park to be unique," said Russell Frey, chairman of the Riley County Commission.

The new park is far from finished. Feyerharm said that when future park expansion is complete, a picnic area, playground, a bicycle and pedestrian bridge over the Kansas River, football field, canoe access to the river and other recreational areas will be available to Manhattan residents.

With a master plan in place and the first stages complete, grants and donations are needed to begin to make the improvements, Feyerharm said.

"A lot of the improvements are separate little projects," Feyerharm said. "Most of them will be at low cost."

Feyerharm said that originally the park area was filled with low-quality mobile homes.

After the flood of 1993, mobile-home owners were given the opportunity to participate in a property buy-out through the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

Property owners who participated in the buy-out were offered counseling and help in relocating, Feyerharm said.

Verne Hart, a business-property owner who participated in the FEMA buy-out, said it was the greatest thing he has ever done.

"The relocation was caused by a very tragic situation," Hart said. "The transition from a trailer park into a beautiful park for people to enjoy is the best thing that could have happened. This area is borrowed from our grandchildren, and one day they will have a wonderful place to play."

Once the buyout was complete, city, county, state and school agencies, with the help of the public, started to make plans to improve the area.

Feyerharm said the park's location near the highway and planned future improvements will give Manhattan visitors a positive view of the city from the moment they drive into town.

accidents in the area brought the idea of converting the avenue to three lanes to the forefront.

"The person who got hit this summer refocused a lot of people's attention on it," he said.

The idea was originally part of the bicycle master plan, which attempted to make bicycles an integral part of the community. The university then gave its input.

Student Senate unanimously passed a resolution last month supporting the plan. Mann said Senate has worked with the city to find the best way to improve the avenue.

"It's a disaster waiting to happen," he said. "It's a wonder to me that there's not an accident every week."

Mann said Denison Avenue is an example where two lanes are sufficient for traffic, making the avenue safer to cross.

"There's not a lot of traffic there — not enough to justify four lanes," he said.

The project would be inexpensive and completed in a short amount of time.

Although exact dollar amounts are unknown, Fehr said the city would not incur any major costs.

"Essentially, all we're doing is changing the location of the stripes," he said.

Other improvements, such as adding a pedestrian traffic light at the corner of North Manhattan Avenue and Thurston Street, also are being studied. The intersection of North Manhattan Avenue and Claflin Road might be widened in the future, with some funds coming from the Kansas Department of Transportation.

The plan to make North Manhattan Avenue a three-lane corridor likely will be the first to become a reality.

City Commissioner Bruce Snead said the improvements have the potential to increase safety in that area, but it is too early to speculate whether it actually will become a three-lane avenue.

"If three lanes can handle the traffic safely, it's probably a very viable alternative," Snead said.

If the changes did occur, it would create the first bikeway painted on a city street.

This summer, when there is less traffic in Manhattan, is the earliest the changes would be made.

"Certainly K-State students are the ones who will take advantage of this," Snead said. "It makes it safer for walking and biking to campus."

Student group dislikes holiday

■ American Indian group says Columbus Day gets undue publicity.

By Jesse McCurry
Kansas State Collegian

American Indians don't celebrate Columbus Day. While government agencies were closed Monday, they focused on something different.

"Our purpose today is to promote awareness of the Native American culture and the insignificance of Columbus Day," said Tammy Goodson, senior in art and president of Native American Student Body. "He didn't even come to the U.S. He went to Cuba and Hispañola. He didn't discover a new world — it was just a new world to him."

An American Indian Day forum sponsored by the NASB Monday in Union 212 focused on the plight of the American Indian.

"We want this to be positive, not negative," Goodson said. "But what we have to talk about is negative about the Indians."

Goodson, member of the Otoe-Missouria Iowa Tribes of Oklahoma, said American Indian Day is just one way to raise awareness of the American Indian.

The forum also addressed the imprisonment of Leonard Paltier, an Indian hero who has been imprisoned for 21 years.

Quinton Shaw, NASB vice president, said Paltier was a member of the Pine Ridge Reservation and was blamed for a 1975 shooting incident on the reservation, involving 150 government agents and spectators.

Since then, Indian groups, Amnesty International, the European Union and high-ranking U.S. lawyers have pressured the federal government to release Paltier.

"Someone is in prison, illegally incarcerated, government gives us the run-around and fails to acknowledge there's a problem, and my bank downstairs is closed," Shaw said. "And here people are celebrating someone who came and massacred a bunch of people."

Goodson said it's important to raise the issue.

"In essence, Leonard Paltier is like the Nelson Mandela for Native Americans," she said. "If we can raise awareness to non-Indians, he might be released. That's so important."

The forum also focused on the use of Indian names and symbols in athletics — for example, the Atlanta Braves and the Washington Redskins.

"Start calling them just Atlanta or the Washington team," Shaw said. "Start changing the way you talk about it."

The cartoon images and tomahawk-chopping associated with several sports teams often depict Indians in silly and incorrect ways that American Indians say they find offensive.

"If there was a soccer team from Berlin, you couldn't have a depiction of the race they tried to wipe out on their helmet," Nathan Dixon, senior in life sciences, said.

Goodson said focusing on children is the best way to change opinions.

"It breaks my heart when my children say, 'Look, mom, they're making fun of the Indians,'" she said. "Kindergartners sometimes ask if I still live in a tepee. The kids — that's all they know. But you see these little light bulbs flash on (when you tell them otherwise). They're open. They haven't shut people off yet."

Goodson challenged listeners to evaluate their attitudes and the way they treat and view American Indians.

"When American self-interest and mythic memory are at stake, it is all too easy to sever the connections between symbol and reality, past and present, and own down on the side of the image.

"The point is that American Indians, or whatever term is politically correct, are a race, a culture, a people who deserve the respect that is due every human being on the earth, and I don't mean immortalizing them by naming a sports team or an automobile after them. You will never see a team named the Georgia Slaves or the Texas Rednecks. So ask yourself why is it OK for Cleveland to have Indians as their mascot and not Caucasians?" Goodson said.

Searchers find last body; death toll from flood is 11

The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Eight days after flash flooding turned timid creeks into dangerous torrents, searchers found what is believed to be the metropolitan area's 11th and last remaining victim from the deluge.

A Kansas City Parks and Recreation worker found the body at about 8 a.m., Fire Department spokesman Brad Humston said. Details of where and how the body were spotted were not immediately available.

The body has not been identified, but it's believed to be that of 18-year-old Justin Clark, who was among seven people swept away from near Brush Creek when 7 inches of rain fell in a matter of hours on Oct. 4 in the Kansas City area.

The body of Justin's brother, 19-year-old Charles Clark Jr., had been recovered earlier.

"No family should have to go through this," Vanessa Clark, the mother of the brothers, said Sunday night before Justin's body was found. "Just when we (bury) Charles, we have to go back, go back and put Justin in."

Near St. Joseph, Mo., the Missouri State Highway Patrol continued its search Monday for Warren L. Akins, 56, whose car was pulled into a Buchanan County creek the night of the storm.

The body of Edna McNeal, 44, was recovered in Brush Creek in Kansas City Saturday. Two other bodies had been found Thursday, and three were recovered Monday.

Floodwaters also claimed the life of a 9-year-old boy in Blue Springs, Mo., east of Kansas City; a Johnson County, Kan., woman whose body was found near an area where several cars stalled in high water south of Brush Creek; and two motorists in Johnson County.

The American Red Cross reported it was nearly done surveying property damage and had found 18 homes destroyed, 299 with significant damage and more than 800 with insignificant damage.

Kansas City is believed to have suffered at least $7 million in damage, with more than $4 million on the Kansas side of the metropolitan area.

Governors of Missouri and Kansas have sought federal disaster declarations.

Kansas City mayor Emanuel Cleaver and area state legislators have agreed to ask Gov. Mel Carnahan to call a special session of the Legislature to authorize the city to seek a sales tax increase to pay for improvements to prevent future flooding.

force.

Solana said the allies issued an activation order formally putting warplanes and other hardware belonging to NATO governments under the command of the Supreme Allied Commander Wesley K. Clark.

He said the order was for both limited airstrikes and a phased air campaign against Yugoslavia.

"We hope this will help negotiations bear fruit. I still believe that diplomacy can succeed and that the use of military force can be avoided," Solana said.

After his briefing to NATO ambassadors, Holbrooke said there was some movement in Belgrade, adding that his aim remained to get Milosevic to provide "full and effective compliance with United Nations Security Council resolutions," calling on him to end the crackdown launched Feb. 28.

Holbrooke talked with Milosevic in Belgrade on Monday, then flew to the U.S. to brief the NATO ambassadors and to meet with Polish Foreign Minister Bronislaw Geremek, whose country now leads the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe.

Geremek said the 54-nation OSCE could send thousands of unarmed civilians to verify a Kosovo settlement.

In Moscow, Russian Defense Minister Igor Sergeyev said Monday that Milosevic had agreed to allow 1,500 international observers to monitor compliance with U.N. demands.

Officials hailed the authorization of airstrikes as a demonstration of the alliance's resolve to end the violence in Kosovo, where hundreds of people have been killed and an estimated 275,000 uprooted since February's crackdown on ethnic Albanian rebels.

K-State treading familiar ground with NCAA

ROVELTO

PATTERSON

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State football program is under investigation by the NCAA for compliance violations after running back Frank Murphy accepted gifts to purchase an automobile.

This is the third time in the last decade K-State could be facing sanctions from the NCAA. The track and field team and the women's basketball team both have been on probation for NCAA violations.

In 1992, John Capriotti, track and field head coach at the time, was caught paying players.

Due to the secondary violation, the next year the team couldn't compete as a team in the conference and national championship. Some scholarships also were taken away.

Cliff Rovelto, the current track and field coach who took Capriotti's place, said the NCAA sanctions were tough on the program internally.

"Even though track is an individual sport, there is a team score kept," he said. "Motivation was certainly impacted because of that."

While the women's team actually improved during that time, Rovelto said the sanctions hurt the men's program.

"We had a drop-off for a couple of years on the men's side," he said. "One-and-a-half scholarships may be four, five or six guys.

Rovelto said the sanctions hurt the program the most externally. Schools might have used it against K-State in recruiting, and K-State coaches had to explain the sanctions to prospective recruits and their families.

"In the last couple of years- we were able to overcome that and take steps forward to becoming a better team," Rovelto said.

Rovelto said the sanctions hurt the program the most externally. Schools might have used it against K-State in recruiting, and K-State coaches had to explain the sanctions to prospective recruits and their families.

"It was a nuisance. It made it more difficult," Rovelto said.

Despite the negative effects of the sanctions, Rovelto said there were some positive aspects as well.

"In a way, it was kind of a blessing. We probably had some people in the program that didn't have their priorities in the right place," he said.

The transition might have eliminated people from the program whose views weren't consistent with K-State's way of looking at things, Rovelto said.

"It was kind of tough for a couple of years, but we came out of it better than we went into it. So who's to say? Maybe in the long run, it was a blessing," he said.

Deb Patterson, women's basketball head coach, said she felt the same way about the sanctions imposed on the women's basketball team in 1996.

"I really believe great things come out of adversity. The adversity of the past gave our players a perspective on the present that they wouldn't have otherwise had," Patterson said. "Anytime you risk losing something, you learn how much you appreciate it, and I think that, in a large part, is what happened to us."

The women's basketball team was put on probation by the NCAA when it found that Brian Agler, former women's basketball coach, had broken nine NCAA rules. These included employing recruits, paying an enrolled student-athlete an excessive salary, unauthorized employment of enrolled student-athletes, providing unauthorized housing and meals to recruits, unauthorized observation and participation of practice games involving recruits, improper off-campus recruiting, failure to monitor summer camps, providing extra benefits to student-athletes and having excessive practices.

The women's program was put on probation for two years, during which it couldn't conduct any satellite summer camps, had two scholarships taken away and had to wait longer to start practice.

Patterson, who came into the women's basketball program after the violations were committed, said the restriction of summer camps hurt the team the most. Summer camps allow members of the team to interact with potential recruits.

"I think every strong program in America looks forward to the interaction of their players with potential recruits at their camp if they're fortunate to be able to get those

POSSIBLE PENALTIES

Possible secondary violation penalties

- Forfeiture of contest in which an individual student-athlete participated.
- Prohibit members of a staff from participating in off-campus recruiting activities.
- Limit of financial awards
- Public reprimand
- Recertification of athletic department's procedure and practice to ensure it is conforming to NCAA compliances

Possible major violation penalties

- Probationary periods
- Reduction of number of expense-paid recruiting visits to the institution
- Prohibit some off-campus recruiting activities
- Reduction in number of financial awards
- Postseason play ineligibility

Greeks drop service project

■ Many things factor into 10-1 vote to cancel Paint It Purple community-service activity.

By TRAVIS D. LENKNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fraternity and sorority homecoming chairs voted to cancel Paint It Purple — an all-greek community-service activity — late last week, citing poor turnout and participation in the event since it began in September.

■ OUR OPINION
The Collegian editorial board voices concern about the canceling of Paint It Purple.
See Page 4.

Some houses supported the decision and said the event should have been canceled because houses weren't participating.

Others said they thought the greek system "blew it."

The decision to cancel Paint It Purple, the philanthropic arm of the homecoming contest, was approved almost unanimously. With four weeks of the six-week program complete, Greek Affairs Adviser Barb Robel said it was obvious that greek houses had bitten off more than they could chew in their commitment with Riley County United Way.

As part of the agreement, United Way organized six weeks of community-service projects for greek houses. If 75 percent of house

Commission revises board's procedures

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

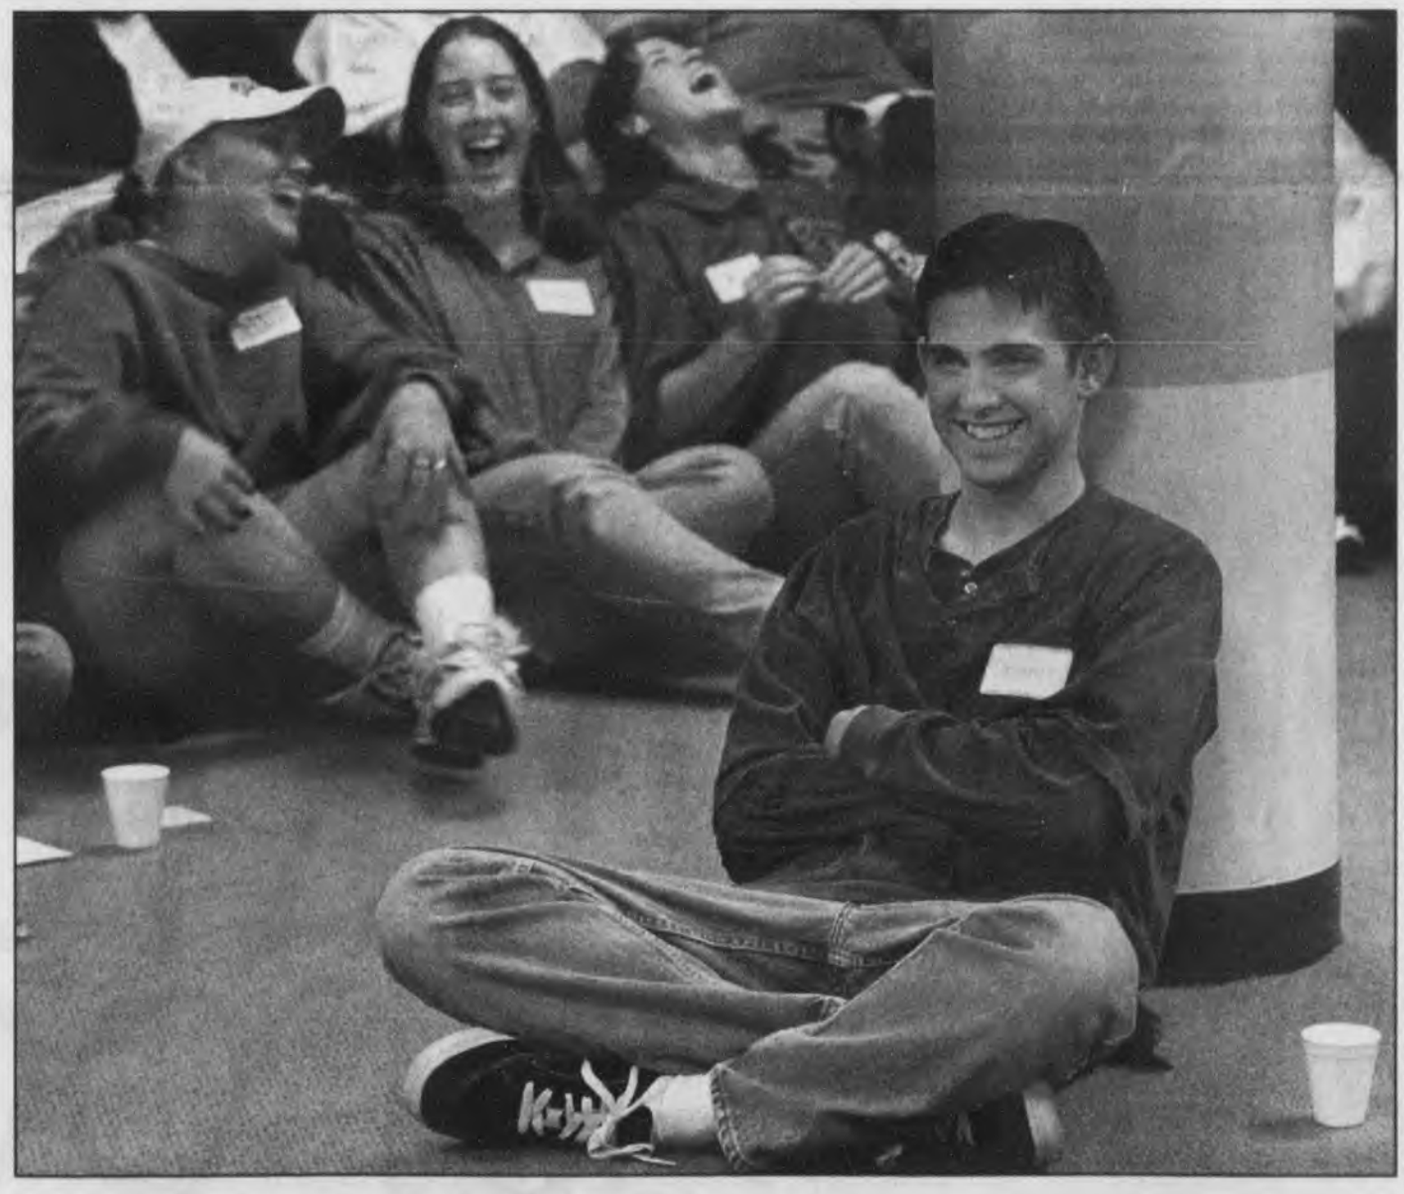
Just weeks before the Nov. 3 vote to continue Manhattan's economic development funding, the Manhattan City Commission met with members of the Manhattan Economic Development Opportunity Fund Advisory Board on Tuesday night to revise the board's procedures.

In 1994, voters approved a .5-percent sales tax set to end this January. The tax was intended to expand local businesses and entice new businesses to Manhattan. The board, created in the same year, approves applications for economic development funds before submitting the applications to the commission for final approval or rejection.

Commissioner Bruce Snead said the .25-percent sales tax up for vote next month was brought to the people so they could decide if they wished to shoulder a new sales-tax burden or not.

Whether it is passed or not, Snead said MEDOFAB's duties would remain the same. If passed, the income would be half that of the previous four years. If rejected, additional funding would end for this program.

"It doesn't change MEDOFAB, it changes the resources available for economic development," Snead said.



The board will continue to monitor the $10 million already invested in economic development this year, Snead said. If existing loans approved under MEDOFAB are paid back to the project, the money will be disbursed again to other applicants.

The discussion during the meeting that brought the most public comment was the proposal by members of the Flint Hills Living Wage Coalition to add a resolution to the Oct. 20 commission meeting agenda. Members want to implement a living-wage requirement of between $8.11 and $8.91 for businesses applying for economic development funds.

Mary Jo Murphy, coalition member who presented the proposal, said the commission should add the resolution before the Nov. 3 vote to show support for voters at or below the poverty line.

"I hear the philosophical and the 'We support a living wage,' but,

Panelists discuss death of Wyoming student

The recent beating death of a gay student in Wyoming made a gay awareness program Tuesday night in Marlatt Hall even more important to the 60 students in attendance.

Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society members served as panelists for the program, sponsored by the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls. Panelists discussed the incident in Wyoming and were asked how safe they felt on the K-State campus.

Mary Renee Smith, BGLS president and panelist, said she was afraid she would let her guard down and something like that would happen here.

"I think it could happen here, but overall, I feel safe on campus," Smith said. "I think a majority of gay people feel safe on campus, but I think it depends on the situation."

Smith said the incident involving Matthew Shepard made her a little more aware.

"The whole Matthew Shepard thing makes me a little more safety-conscious," Smith said.

Coordinators said the event was organized to denounce stereotypes about gays, lesbians and bisexuals and create awareness about the aforementioned groups.

Smith said the purpose of the panel was to provide information.

Students would agree or disagree to certain questions by going to opposite ends of the lobby. Maddox, along with Jennifer Buchanan (not shown), senior in English and the multicultural program coordinator for KSUARH, organized the event.

MHS student to appear in court this month

A court date has been set for the Manhattan High School sophomore charged with bringing a gun onto school property last month.

Jason Brinkeroff, 15, of Ogden, Kan., will appear at 4 p.m. Oct. 21 in Riley County District Court, Assistant Riley County Attorney Mike Kearns said Tuesday. He faces charges of minor in possession of a firearm, possession of stolen property and criminal possession of a firearm.

Brinkeroff was detained by MHS staff members on Sept. 18, when a routine search of his backpack produced a stolen 9mm handgun and a loaded ammunition clip. After a five-day suspension and a disciplinary hearing, Brinkeroff was expelled from school for the remainder of the 1998-99 year and the summer term.

His brother-in-law has been arrested in Pottawatomie County for stealing the gun, which he allegedly gave to Brinkeroff.

Kearns said Brinkeroff can enter a plea at the Oct. 21 appearance, or his attorneys can ask the judge for more time to consider their case.

If an innocent plea is entered, Brinkeroff likely would face trial before a judge — not a jury — as soon as the court's calendar allows, Kearns said. If Brinkeroff pleads guilty and the judge accepts the plea, the matter will be set for sentencing, he said.

Since Brinkeroff is a juvenile, sentencing guidelines are complex, but Kearns said many options exist.

"It depends on his prior history, which I'm not certain of, but it could range from simple probation to serving time in an age-appropriate juvenile correction facility," Kearns said.

Investigation finds no harassment evidence

LINCOLN, Neb. — An investigation of the University of Nebraska-Lincoln's Department of Political Science found "no hard evidence" of sexual harassment but made several recommendations to improve the working environment for women.

"A vast majority of respondents did not identify problems with gender-related differential treatment in the department," a committee said in a report released Tuesday. "However, the committee noted some issues that warranted recommendations to improve the climate for women in the department."

The three-member committee that did the investigation was selected by UNL Chancellor James Moeser last May to look into allegations of sexual harassment in the department.

The committee interviewed more than 50 people during its investigation, John Comer, chairman of the department, said.

The allegations started when assistant professor Valerie Schwebach alleged that former department chairman David Forsythe did not act promptly when she complained about an obscene message directed toward her that was displayed on a department bulletin board.

Schwebach, who was denied tenure, left UNL last May. A department secretary said she did not know where Schwebach was living.

Other women also filed complaints.

In April, the Academic Rights and Responsibilities Committee submitted a report to Moeser detailing examples of sexual harassment reported by professors and graduate students within the department. Those who gave testimony said department officials tolerate an environment where sexual harassment is prevalent.

The April report called for the department to be placed in "receivership" — described by the university as a probation-like state — for at least three years. During that time, political science faculty members and graduate students should take sensitivity training on race and gender issues, the committee recommended.

That recommendation was rejected by the report released Tuesday.

Comer said he welcomed the review.

"Students and faculty can rest assured that the Department of Political Science has and will continue to provide an open, tolerant and supportive environment for everyone," he said.

Tuesday's report recommended, among other things, that the department hire more women.

Moeser said in a statement that he was satisfied with the report.

"For my perspective, this report is one of the most scholarly and thorough reviews of such a situation that I've ever examined," he said.

Thousands turn out to hear Mary's words

CONYERS, Ga. — More than 100,000 people descended on Nancy Fowler's farm Tuesday to hear the last of the annual messages the homemaker said she relays from the Virgin Mary.

Fowler said Mary had visited her earlier in the day inside her small farmhouse about 30 miles east of Atlanta.

"The future holds no concern to those who truly seek God and truly love him and remain in his favor," Fowler, reading from handwritten notes, told the crowd.

From October 1990 to May 1994, Fowler delivered the messages on the 13th of each month. Then she announced the Virgin Mary would appear with a public message only once a year on Oct. 13.

The crowd has increased steadily over the years. Fowler announced last October that this year's public message would be the last.

Fowler, whose visions have not been endorsed by the local Catholic hierarchy, told the crowd that Mary told her she would not be permitted to visit with her again in the way she has since 1990.

The crowd responded to the message Tuesday with occasional gasps and scattered applause. But for the most part, they were quiet and attentive while Fowler read for 30 minutes.

People fell to their knees, gasped and clapped when Fowler said that a multitude of souls accompanied Mary in her vision. She said the souls were in purgatory but were being released into heaven in honor of Mary.

Fowler attracts many visitors from Mexico to hear her messages, and most in Tuesday's crowd were women.

"We in Mexico and Latin America believe in the power of Maria and that's the only thing that can unify us," said Christina Peschard, who traveled to Conyers with her sister and mother from Zacatecas, Mexico.

Rockdale County Sheriff spokesman Lance Carter said Tuesday's crowd was the biggest since Fowler began delivering the message.

Hours before Fowler's appearance, thousands of worshipers prayed and sang while waving white scarves on a hillside.

"This is the greatest experience I've ever had, and nothing is going to keep me away from here," said Angie Moogalin of Chester, Va., who was making her sixth trip to Conyers.

CNN invites Cronkite to cover Glenn's flight

NEW YORK — When CNN arranged to bring back Walter Cronkite to lead coverage of John Glenn's return to space later this month, it beat the anchorman's old employers at CBS to the punch.

Cronkite said Tuesday he prefers to cover Glenn's launch for CNN because the cable news network had more time to cover space flights more like the major TV networks did in the 1960s.

The former "CBS Evening News" anchor comes out of retirement on Oct. 26 to anchor, with Miles O'Brien, CNN's coverage of Glenn's liftoff in the space shuttle. He'll participate in CNN's coverage off and on until the shuttle's planned landing on Nov. 7.

His return to the air seemed to take CBS by surprise.

"Their reaction was 'Gosh, we wish we'd thought of it,'" he said.

"This is all giving me the chance to play the game again the way we used to play it at the networks," he said. But he said he couldn't criticize CBS for not spending as much time on the flight.

He won't be absent from CBS's airwaves, though. Cronkite, who anchored most of CBS's coverage of space flights in the 1960s, will be interviewed by Dan Rather for a special CBS report and will participate, along with Ed Bradley, in an interview with Glenn that will be broadcast on "60 Minutes."

K-State to use new Internet technology

By Gabe Eckert
Kansas State Collegian

K-State is a charter member of a new Internet that has been developed specifically for research and education.

The design of the new Internet, Internet2, was finalized less than a month ago and will provide many benefits to universities such as K-State, said Rob Caffey, Internet2 applications representative and associate director of information systems for the Division of Continuing Education.

"Internet2 is a project of over 130 research institutions and some corporate sponsors to build high-speed, next-generation Internet applications," he said. "The new Internet will greatly benefit research and education."

Internet2 allows universities and research labs to electronically pool their computing resources. As a result, it allows them to conduct better research by allowing more efficient real-time communication at a speed 140 times faster than the regular Internet.

"It's a great opportunity for universities like K-State to further the cutting edge of technology," Caffey said.

Beth Unger, vice provost for academic services and technology and dean of continuing education, said another benefit of Internet2 will be more collaborative research by universities.

"An increased amount of collaborative research will provide an environment in which forefront research can take place," she said. "It will provide an opportunity for research to take place that otherwise would not."

Unger said she also sees benefits in education from use of Internet2 technology.

"Initially, the major benefit will come from research," she said. "But, in the long run, there will be tremendous benefits in education."

Educational benefits include more efficient distance learning, computer-

"Internet2 will change the character of how people learn."

Vice provost for academic services and technology

ized visualization of scientific data, Internet2-based team teaching between universities and classroom incorporation of virtual-reality technology, Unger said.

"Internet2 will change the character of how people learn," she said. "We now think largely in terms of lectures and classroom discussions. With Internet2, faculty will have more freedom to work individually with undergraduate students and incorporate new technology."

K-State has been working for more than a year to adopt this new technology at a cost of nearly $1 million. The university estimates an additional annual cost of more than $500,000 to maintain and utilize Internet2, Unger said.

She said the benefits of the new technology outweigh the monetary investment.

"We have just began to scratch the surface of how we think about and use information and technology," Unger said. "Internet2 will present us with countless benefits."

In addition to the benefits associated with Internet2, she said it also will present students and faculty with challenges.

"Internet2 won't make the world any easier," Unger said. "It makes it more complex."

Yugoslav president agrees to begin peace talks

By Jovana Gec
The Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Rushing to meet a deadline set by NATO, the government outlined its plan Tuesday to comply with a deal to solve the Kosovo crisis while foreign powers took the first steps to put 2,000 monitors in place to prevent cheating.

Threatened by NATO airstrikes, Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic agreed Monday to withdraw special forces from Kosovo, begin peace negotiations with separatist ethnic Albanians and allow international observers into the troubled Serb province.

But several agreements to put the deal into force still are to be finalized, and it wasn't clear when ethnic Albanians who have fled Yugoslav security forces might begin to return to their villages.

NATO officials said they hadn't called off the airstrikes yet, and they could still bomb any time after Friday, the deadline for Milosevic's compliance.

"We hope that this will mark a turning point ... but the truth is not in what I am saying here today. The truth is in compliance," U.S. envoy Richard Holbrooke said after wrapping up weeklong talks with the president.

If honored, the commitments should end a seven-month crackdown against Kosovo Albanian militants in the southern Serbian province that killed hundreds — most of them civilians — and left up to 300,000 displaced.

In a rare televised address, the first since the 1995 Dayton agreements that ended the Bosnian war, Milosevic sought to portray the agreements as a victory, saying they "avert the danger of a military intervention against our country.

"The agreements ... are entirely in accordance with the interests of our country," he added, citing "enormous pressures that we have been exposed to."

Since the crackdown began Feb. 28, Milosevic has insisted the crisis was an internal matter in which foreign powers should play no role. The crackdown was aimed at the rebel Kosovo Liberation Army fighting to wrest Kosovo away from Serbia, the dominant republic of Yugoslavia.

Holbrooke said the key to the accord was Milosevic's decision to allow a 2,000-member "verification mission" and to permit aerial verification by noncombat aircraft that could begin as soon as the end of the week.

"They are not monitors, not observers," Holbrooke said. "They are compliance verifiers."

Despite the rush to implement the Kosovo accord, officials admitted Tuesday it could take weeks before the full complement of 2,000 international observers is on the ground to make sure Milosevic lives up to the agreement.

The Vienna-based Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, which is responsible for the ground component, lacks a large permanent staff. It will have to turn to its 54 member states, including the United States, Russia, Canada and European Union countries, to provide people with the proper training and skills for the job.

In the Kosovo capital, Pristina, the political representative of the Kosovo Liberation Army, Adem Demaci, said he was disappointed that the verification forces in Kosovo would be unarmed. And in Geneva, Switzerland, other KLA representatives said nothing short of independence was acceptable.

Milosevic must take four steps: withdraw special troops from Kosovo, sign an agreement on the verification mission, sign an agreement on airborne reconnaissance over Kosovo and hammer out a framework agreement by November outlining future talks with ethnic Albanians.

The Serbian government hurriedly outlined its plan Tuesday for a political solution for the Kosovo crisis and announced local elections in the province for 1999.

The principles for a political solution with a time frame for their fulfillment envisage self-rule in Kosovo, establishment of local police, elections within nine months, amnesty and an international investigation of alleged war crimes and monitoring.

Political negotiations with the ethnic Albanians also will continue in Kosovo, led by Christopher Hill, the U.S. ambassador to Macedonia.

The ethnic Albanians, who form 90 percent of Kosovo's 2 million population, have insisted on independence rather than regaining the autonomy Milosevic stripped in 1989.

International leaders stepped up efforts to resolve the crisis because of fears that thousands of homeless refugees would die if they could not return to their homes by the time winter sets in.

For some Kosovo refugees it is too late.

Besart Buqa died Tuesday in Kosovo, only five weeks old, after spending the entire life of five miserable weeks as a refugee, living under plastic sheets and make-up tents.

His mother and father said they were too afraid of Serb forces to return home in Budakovo, 25 miles southwest of Pristina.

The boy died of the cold and exposure, his parents said.

Paint it Purple shows weakness in planning

When a commitment is made, it becomes a vow only to be broken in the most dire circumstances. It is a promise that should surpass minor trivialities or inconveniences. It is independent of outside influences.

A commitment to act is a solemn oath.

In the case of this year's "Paint it Purple" that oath was broken.

The fact that sorority and fraternity homecoming competitors made a commitment to the United Way should have served as reason enough to see it through. They told the United Way they would be providing their charities and social service groups with volunteers. They told them they would need jobs for hundreds to accomplish. They told them to be prepared on Saturday mornings with the equipment and human resources necessary to supervise large groups of people. They made a promise to the United Way.

If they had followed through with their plans, there would be no reason to criticize. Until this point, homecoming competitors had provided the United Way with scores of volunteers for community service projects. True, their central motivation was to win homecoming points, but they still managed to do good. Tasks ranged from fifteen minutes to an hour-and-a-half in length.

In order to win full points, the participating organizations had to have a certain percentage of their membership in attendance. This year, the point value was high enough to discourage deadbeats — higher than any other single homecoming competition. Failing to make the cutoff — 75-percent attendance — meant losing all points for the activity, both for your organization and your partners. It was virtually impossible to win if full attendance wasn't achieved.

Unfortunately, some houses had difficulty making the cutoff. The result was their partners had little reason to continue in the homecoming activities at that point, because there was no chance to win. In that light, waking up an entire fraternity or sorority on a Saturday morning before a football game to do community service for a competition already lost can be a daunting task.

So, Greek Affairs decided to cancel "Paint It Purple" prematurely because of poor attendance. Instead of trying to work around it, or to improve the project, they chose to cut it entirely. It is an act reminiscent of a petulant child who cannot win a game choosing instead to change the rules at the last minute.

Now, houses who would have planned on continuing with "Paint It Purple" without the point-share have been prevented from doing so. The truth of the matter is houses committed to working with the United Way should follow through — they should be allowed to follow through. Many probably will try to go ahead and complete a service project anyway.

It is unfortunate things turned out this way — many of the pairings that stood no chance of winning because of low attendance were the same ones who voted to discontinue "Paint It Purple." Certainly with it out of the way, each homecoming pair is once again evenly matched.

The truth is the homecoming winner this year could have been someone who had made a real difference; someone who was committed to community service. It is our hope that Greek Affairs will choose to reinstate "Paint It Purple" next year under different conditions to avoid the same situation.

Hopefully, the United Way will give them that opportunity. Right now, representatives from the United Way feel let down and frustrated. We might have alienated them from K-State.

Until we reconcile, however, Greek Affairs hasn't painted Manhattan purple — they have painted themselves black.

Board should not encourage drinking as No. 1 fun thing

Editor,

The Collegian's No. 1 way to have fun in Manhattan during a weekend with no football is both banal and irresponsible (Our View, Oct. 2).

Beer drinking might be a reality, but advocating it shouldn't be the position of your editorial board. Try a little originality or at least encourage moderation. Change your entry from "Beer. Enough said," to "Beer. Enough is enough."

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

K-State's defense by any other name would still wreak havoc

Lynch Mob — two simple words that have conjured up plenty of controversy on this campus.

No one seems to know exactly when it appeared or who came up with this nickname for the Wildcat defense. It became a matter of national record in the Oct. 27, 1997, issue of "Sports Illustrated." Under the heading "This Week's Sign That the Apocalypse Is Upon Us," was "The Kansas State defense has nicknamed itself the Lynch Mob."

There are many people who oppose the defense's chosen title. Those who do oppose it feel it is highly disrespectful to glorify a racist activity such as lynching. This is a fairly valid point, though not all lynchings were racially motivated.

By definition, a lynching is when a mob puts a person to death without due process of law, under the pretense of administering justice.

The manner of death is most often quite brutal.

Throughout the history of Europe, many groups were subject to lynching. During the crusades, Christians lynched thousands of Jews. Political leaders were lynched during uprisings at various points in history; the first one that comes to my mind is Benito Mussolini, Italy's fascist dictator of the World War II era.

The term "lynching" is most often associated with the United States, not because the practice began here, but because the term originated in Virginia during the American Revolution. Charles Lynch was a planter and patriot who acted as the judge of a vigilante "court" formed to punish loyalists. Thus, the ugly practice of mob justice was dubbed lynching.

In colonial times, people accused of witchcraft were often hanged, burned or beaten.

Some of them received pseudo-trials before death and therefore did not fit the definition of a lynching, but many were killed by angry mobs upon suspicion or accusation of witchcraft.

With the coming of the revolution, British political officials occasionally were lynched. The ever-popular royal tax collectors were the most likely to meet their demise at the hands of angry colonials.

In the Old West, horse thieves, murderers and rapists lived more in fear of lynch mobs than of the law. Being arrested and tried in a court might well mean hanging, but the mobs would do far worse.

However repulsing the lynch mobs might have been, they were at their worst during the times of the Civil War Reconstruction in the South. According to reports, 4,730 people were lynched between 1882 and 1951. Of these victims, 1,293 were white, and 3,437 were black.

The blacks often were accused of crimes real or imagined, ranging from murder of a white person to failure to show "proper" respect to a white person. Many of the white people lynched were accused of supporting the rights of blacks.

Other than a few isolated incidents, lynchings now have been snuffed out.

The whole ugly topic has risen to attention lately with the nickname of the Wildcat defense. I'm quite sure whoever came up with the name had no intention of glorifying its foul history. They probably had in mind the swarming nature of the defense and how they converge upon one individual (the guy with the ball) just like a mob would swarm to its victim.

Another aspect that likely made the name appealing is the intimidating nature of the term. A defense wants to strike terror in the hearts of the opposing offense, as the mobs did in their victims. It wants the ball carrier to feel there is no escape. Intimidation is a big part of the mental aspect of football. An intimidated offense makes more mistakes than a confident one.

I agree a defense should have an imposing name, not something warm and fuzzy. I don't find the nickname as offensive as many other people do. Then again, I don't find much of anything offensive. Perhaps the moniker is attracting too much of the wrong kind of national attention.

After all, a K-State defense by any other name would kick as much butt!

Saferide would only make bad problem worse

It's 2 a.m. The bars are closed. You're drunk. Your friends are pressuring you to drive your car home. You know you're completely tanked and have no business on the road.

Who you gonna call?

If short-sighted, anti-intellectual student senators fulfill their wish, you'll be calling Saferide.

Yes, Saferide, that completely uncompelling argument for student-sponsored taxis to transport drunk students home from the bars. My one question (as if) for our precious senators would be: Will you also hold my hand as I cross the street, tuck me into bed and give me a kiss on the forehead? If you don't, I might cry. Or soil my diaper.

On top of this pure baloney, the senators actually are considering having all students pay for it through a student fee. Three cheers and a toast to them! How smart. Make everyone on campus pay so a few kids can drink to excess on the weekends.

I know I chose K-State over other colleges simply because I knew for my hard-earned tuition dollars I was getting more. No single-parent family struggling to raise two kids while attending college is going to keep me from getting fudged up on the weekends with more liquor than anyone thought possible. No, sir. I'm making them pay for it, too.

All of you wussies out there who think drinking is a bad thing, well you need to listen to your Student Senate. It knows what's best. If some of us want to get drunk then all of us should get drunk. Let's change K-State's mission to "By the bottle, for the bottle and refill the bottle."

How much, gentle reader, will campus change because of this brilliant — I dare say, visionary — proposal?

A typical conversation, Before Saferide (B.S. — sort of ironic), probably would have sounded like this:

Cindy: So, like, you are all that and a bag of chips. Oh, bleep, I'm so drunk. I can hardly stand up. Just how will I make it to Lucky Thirty?

Bill: Leave it to me. I've got these Secret Service guys who won't get off my back. It's like — I can't make one unscheduled trip to Kansas to go out once in a while? Bleep. I'm as drunk as Ted Kennedy at a health-care symposium.

Cindy: Oh, Mr. President, really. My breasts are not playthings like a nuclear missile and stuff.

Bill: I'm giving you an executive order, Cindy. You and I are going to be in a state of union tonight!

Cindy: Well, pardon me, president, but my bra is a classified document. You ain't getting me involved in no west fling of the White House.

Russell: Can you two sustain these Presidential quips much longer? Let's get to the sex. Thanks to CNN, my attention span is shorter than a gnat's. Get to the S-E-X!

If that was a typical conversation Before Saferide, it's hard to imagine one After Saferide.

But, we'll try:

Cindy: If I had a brother, he would be brother booze! I'm as tanked as a freshman pledge at a barn party. And these clothes are getting so confining. What am I to do?

Bill: Well, even though we are both of the consenting age and are totally responsible for our own actions, as I surely know firsthand, I think we should call someone else to bail us out.

I mean, why be responsible for your own actions when you can just make a phone call and get out of it? Okay, so I'm an alcoholic. At least K-State's Student Governing Association is willing to cover it up for me.

Russell: I'll drink to that.

Ted Kennedy: Ich bin ein boozehound.

Oh, Ted, the humanity. I've heard some wacky schemes in my day at K-State — a bass pond, a parking garage in Memorial Stadium, linear tuition — but nothing comes close to government-sponsored excessive drinking. It's almost some Bacchanalian concept of the end of the world; it boggles the rational mind. Or is it that our Senate is making an attempt to surpass even Karl Marx at orchestrating one of the boldest social reformations of modern times? Yes, surely that's it.

Perhaps the true lesson in this campus charade is that this university — meaning certain higher-ups and all that — have refused to acknowledge K-State has a significant drinking problem that isn't getting better. It's facilitated by a brotherhood of easy bar owners making a quick buck, students breaking the law and more peer pressure than an after-school movie.

When will this campus wake up and face reality?

Hello. I'm K-State and I'm an alcoholic.

Infractions Committee.

Now, K-State waits.

Sports Information Director Kent Brown said Tuesday that the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics expects a decision from the NCAA within the next two to three weeks. Until then, he said, it's business as usual.

"It's just status quo until we hear from them," Brown said. "The information we received was that it would be four to six weeks before we should hear back from the committee. That would put it at the end of October or early November."

Urick, President Jon Wefald and others made the trip to Atlanta to make the case that K-State shouldn't be punished for Murphy's mistake. The NCAA's enforcement staff said it considered the violation a secondary offense, meaning the university wouldn't be punished, but the Infractions Committee asked to review the case.

That committee could deem the incident a major violation and punish the university, saying the Garden City, Kan.-area boosters who gave Murphy the money for the car last spring were acting on the university's behalf.

Wefald said he doesn't have any expectations about the upcoming ruling, which could include a loss of scholarships, revenue or postseason play for the football program. He said the committee faces a dilemma — whether or not to make an example out of K-State.

"If it's only a secondary infraction, they're kind of wondering what kind of lesson that sends to alumni from any other school. Alums just aren't supposed to engage in activity like this," Wefald said. "But on the other hand, they understand that it was a number of independent agents in the western part of the state who did this on their own. They understand that completely."

Wefald said the NCAA's enforcement staff was helpful during the Atlanta presentation.

"They could not have been more helpful ... at the beginning, the middle and again at the end, they said in judging this case with other cases they'd seen over the years, their recommendation was that it was a secondary infraction," Wefald said.

Because K-State reported the case before it was discovered by the NCAA, Urick said there were fewer discrepancies during the NCAA's investigation. The enforcement staff accepted K-State's report on what happened without disputing the facts, which is unusual, he said.

The committee won't necessarily use the enforcement staff's recommendation in its decision.

"The Infractions Committee really doesn't always take the word of the enforcement staff. They're independent, and they have the right to make their own determinations, and they do that after they review the material," Urick said.

K-State's investigation into the matter is expected to cost nearly $25,000, Urick said.

The boosters who contributed money to Murphy will have to pay for a portion of the cost before they will be considered eligible to support the department again, he said.

Until the decision is handed down, Wefald said it's not useful to guess as to what the penalty could be.

"All you can do is be realistic in a situation like this and hope for the best and expect the worst," he said.

BGLS

"We do panels like this to try to raise awareness," Smith said. "We're not here to change anyone's beliefs — just here to put real people with real faces, with terms like bisexual, gay and lesbian."

The panel also discussed other topics relating to homosexuality and bisexuality and answered a variety of questions. Panel members talked about how they told their parents of their lifestyle choice. Each one had different experiences.

"My parents were extremely not cool with it. Their first reaction was to throw me out of the house and decided they wouldn't," said Paul Donovan, graduate student in student affairs.

Donovan said he now lives his life knowing that when he meets a significant other, his parents will not allow him in the house.

"'Just so you know, we're not gonna throw you out for being gay, but you'll never be able to bring anybody home to meet the family,'" Donovan said his mother said.

Donovan said his response was simple.

"'OK, as long as you understand that if I ever meet somebody who I am gonna settle down with, then I am not coming home again,'" Donovan said.

Jennifer Buchanan, KSUARH multicultural program coordinator, said the night went well.

"I was very pleased with how the night went," Buchanan said. "I was pleased with the number of people who came and the reaction we got."

However, a fire alarm interrupted the discussion halfway through. Smith said she was not sure why the alarm was pulled but that she hoped it was not out of hate.

"I would not say this is purposeful, but I do find it an interesting coincidence," Smith said.

KSUARH social programming coordinator Marc Maddox said he also didn't know why the fire alarm was pulled.

"I don't know if it was a real fire or if it was just a prank. If it is, we'll go back and start again," Maddox said. "We can't let something like this stop us."

Marlatt officials said they didn't have any details as to who pulled the alarm or where it was pulled.

SANCTIONS

recruits to come to camp," Patterson said.

Patterson said the sanction was unfortunate, because the women who have been unable to work the camps for the past two summers were not involved in the violations.

As with the track and field sanctions, Patterson said other schools have used the violations against K-State in the recruiting aspect.

Patterson said she doesn't let that affect the women's basketball program.

"You can compensate for that by being the initiator with respect to all communication to the people you're involved with," she said.

"You attack the issue head-on prior to someone else attacking from a negative point of view."

Although the women's basketball sanctions and the track and field sanctions only applied to the individual programs, the entire Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and K-State itself are affected, Rovelto and Patterson said.

It has a huge effect on the entire athletic department when one program isn't doing what it's supposed to be doing, Rovelto said.

Patterson said the effect on the university can be positive.

"It certainly increases the awareness of the importance of NCAA compliances across campus, across the university and throughout your individual athletic programs," she said.

Athletic Director Max Urick said he agrees that violations can heighten awareness.

"It reemphasizes the importance of compliance to the NCAA, compliance to rules and paying attention to details," he said.

But, Urick said, there is also a negative effect.

"When things go right, everyone benefits, but when things go wrong, everyone suffers," he said.

With respect to this year's football violations, both Rovelto and Patterson said they think the NCAA should be lenient despite the previous violations of their programs.

"You don't want to make light of things. A crime is a crime," Rovelto said.

"But there's a difference between manslaughter and capital murder; there's a difference between a coach knowingly doing something wrong and something out of his control."

Jane Jankowski, NCAA pubic relations staff member, said sometimes the NCAA will look at past violations due to the repeat-violator rule. According to the NCAA, the repeat-violator rule, or "death penalty," applies to an institution if, within a five-year period, a major violation occurs after the announcement of a major case, and the infractions case involving the second violation is processed to conclusion within five years.

The second violation does not have to be in the same sport.

However, the NCAA should look at the fact that no one at K-State had any knowledge of the football violation as it was happening, Rovelto said.

"It's kind of hard to control some of these things," he said.

Patterson said K-State has dealt with all of its violations — including the football violation — in the best possible way.

"I think when you take an assertive approach to a problem and you demonstrate that you will not allow that type of problem to exist in your athletic department and at your university, people respect that," Patterson said.

Urick said it's hard to speculate how the NCAA violations will affect the football program, but he said he doesn't think its image will be damaged too severely.

"If any impact, it will be minimal, because the knowledgeable people will realize that no K-State personnel was involved with any of this, and it was people outside that were involved in the infraction," he said.

Urick said K-State is vigilant and consistent in enforcing NCAA rules. K-State has a good monitoring system that detects any violations, and if there are violations, K-State reports them to the NCAA, he said.

Patterson said she felt that K-State follows NCAA compliance better than any other university.

"When you look at the latest situation, it was such an uncontrollable third-, fourth-, fifth-party type of a scenario," Patterson said, "and it involved a student athlete who had not stepped on campus and started their course work, and they hadn't really been under the guides of the program itself.

"I really think the NCAA understands that and, I would think, realizes that the tentacles of a university can only extend so far," she said.

High number of penalties draws attention of coach

COOPER

■ Players are frustrated by penalties; Snyder says problem cannot continue.

BY JOHN BERGGREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Oakland Raiders made a name for themselves in the NFL for being the most-penalized team in professional football. K-State is trying its hardest not to claim that title in college football.

The Wildcats are averaging 11 penalties for 91 yards a game through the first five contests of the season. At Colorado, K-State committed 11 penalties for 99 yards, many of which halted Wildcat scoring drives.

Coach Bill Snyder said he was concerned with the yellow flags the Wildcats have been seeing.

"It's probably something that we're not going to be able to get away with very much longer," Snyder said. "It just makes sense that when you play good football teams that you're going to end up beating yourself if we keep doing this."

Fixing a penalty-prone team is not easy, Snyder said. There often are too many variables that can go into each individual infraction.

"In some cases, it can be lack of focus," Snyder said. "In all cases, there's a reason behind it, but in some cases, the reasons are different, and the variables are different, and you address it one way and then the next week, it changes."

In past years, the Wildcats have had officials in practice throughout the season. This season K-State ended officiated practices after two-a-days. Snyder said he is considering bringing the flags back onto the practice field.

Linebacker Mark Simoneau said being plagued with penalties has been frustrating, and it might have changed the outcome of the Colorado game.

"I think the momentum swung in their direction several times in the game when we gave them penalties to keep their drives moving," Simoneau said. "Penalties are a factor in every game.

"You can beat yourself with them, and we know that. Sometimes they happen and you just don't know why," he said. "The guys are not trying to get penalties. It's something we've got to work on, and we can work on them in practice by making sure we're doing things right."

However, when penalties occur in ball games, they're not something K-State can dwell on.

"You just have to keep going," Simoneau said. "It's not something that's going to lose a football game for you at the time it happens, so you've just got to keep going and try to correct it. You can't look back on penalties that may have been questionable."

Safety Jarrod Cooper said he was frustrated with the penalties as well.

"It seems like they've tried to call me for everything," Cooper said. "They'll try to call me for holding just for walking funny back to the huddle.

"It gets you mad, but you got to get over it, or you'll lose. You have to learn to get over stuff out on the field, and we've done that so far this year."

NBA cancels 1st 2 weeks of campaign

BY CHRIS SHERIDAN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The NBA's perfect record — 35,001 games over 51 seasons, never once interrupted by a strike or lockout — is history.

The league wiped out the first two weeks of the 1998-1999 season Tuesday, canceling regular-season games because of a work stoppage.

The action was taken when collective bargaining talks between owners and players broke off after about 3-1/2 hours.

"My job is to put on games for the fans, not to cancel them. It's terribly disappointing," commissioner David Stern said.

A total of 99 games from Nov. 3 through Nov. 16 will not be played or made up, and the majority of players will miss their first paychecks Nov. 15.

The union put forth an 11th-hour proposal — a luxury tax on players re-signing under the so-called Larry Bird exception — to address the owners' concerns over escalating salaries. It wasn't enough to save the full 82-game season.

"It's evident we're not going to reach an agreement any time soon, so we are reluctantly canceling the first two weeks," a dour-faced deputy commissioner Russ Granik said from a podium at a midtown Manhattan hotel.

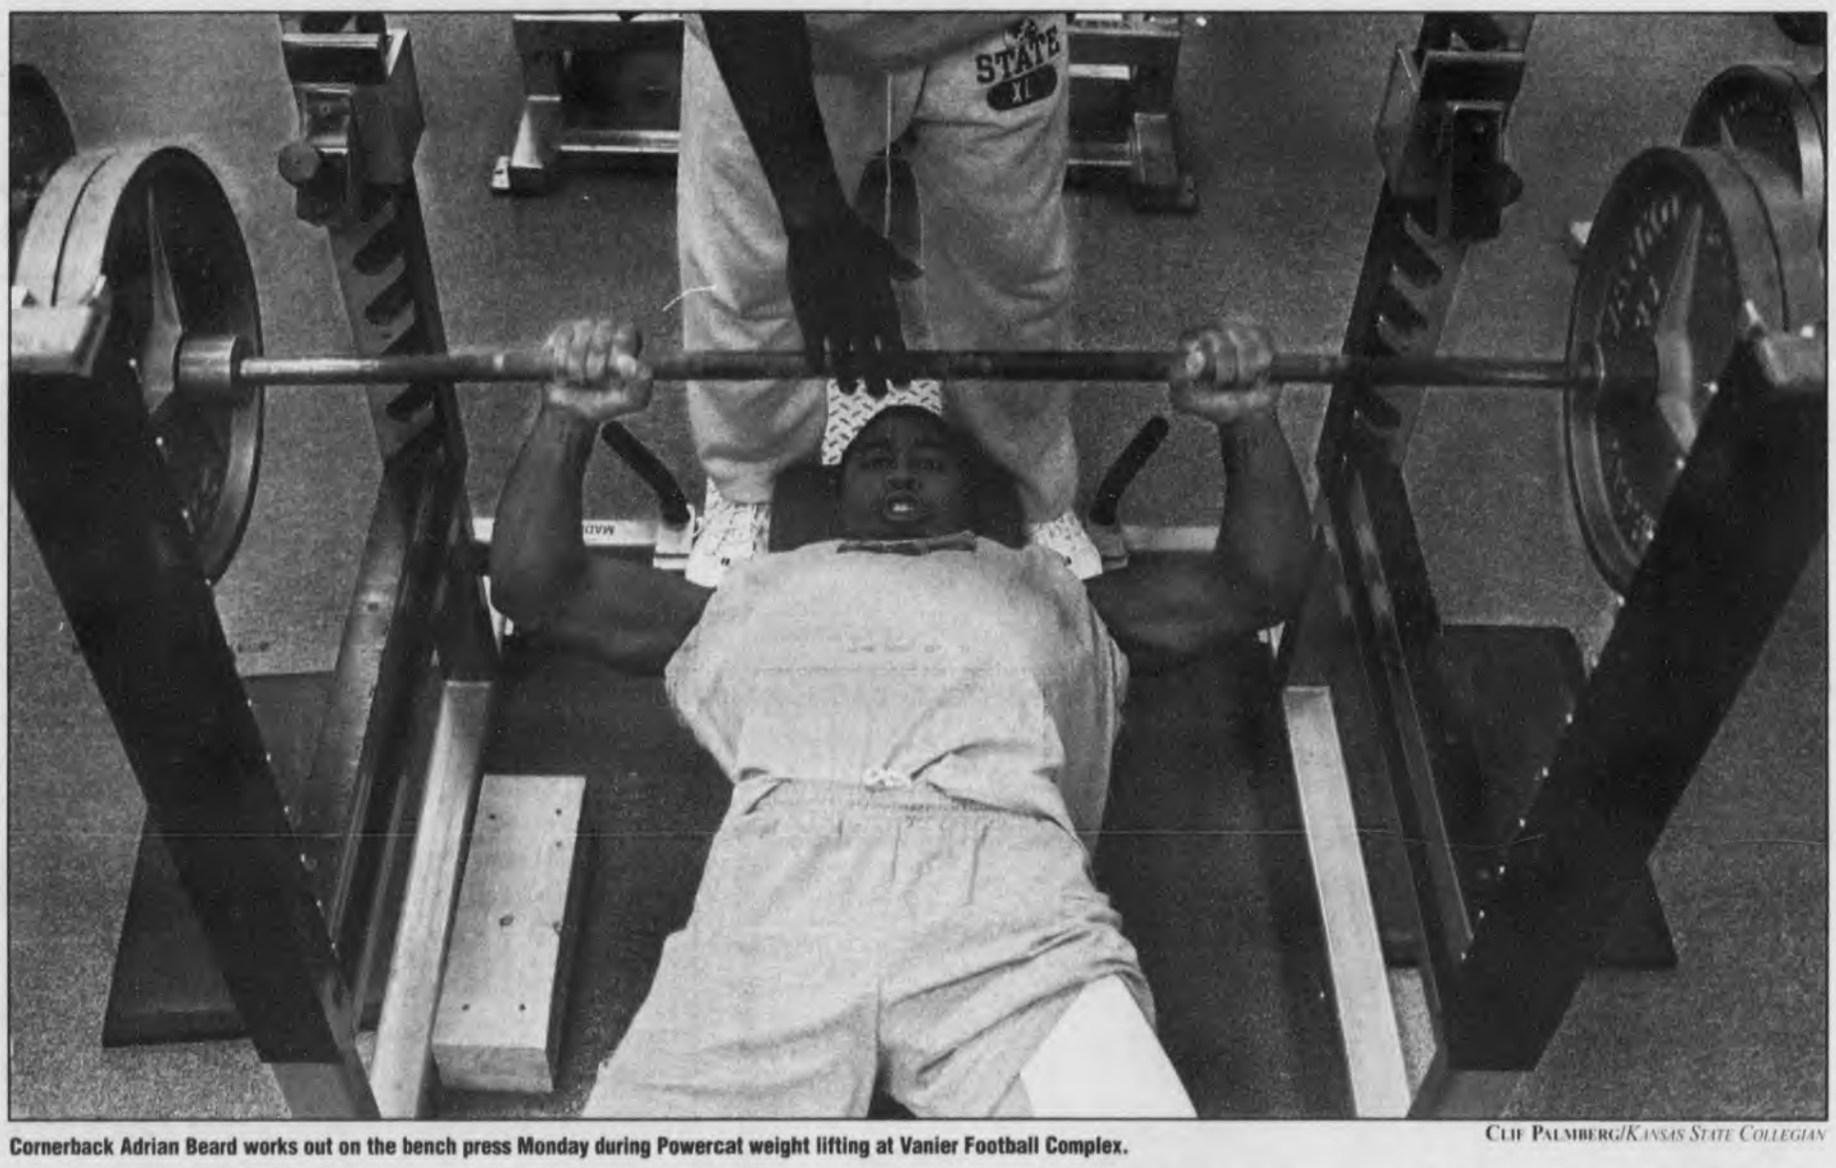
Sitting beside him was Stern, who looked equally glum.

The NBA had been the only significant American professional sports league that never lost a game to a labor dispute.

Baseball's disastrous strike of 1994-95 wiped out the World Series, the NHL suffered through a 2-/2-month lockout that ended in January 1995 and an NFL strike in 1987 lasted about a month.

Two previous NBA lockouts in 1995 and 1996 ended before any games were missed.

The next move in this dispute will come from the owners, who will deliver a counterproposal later this week. Tuesday was the 105th day of the lockout.



"It doesn't look promising," Stern said. "The reality is that the owners had no choice. The union indicated some flexibility, but the reality is that their proposal doesn't completely address what we've focused on."

The sides met for two sessions, one in the morning when the union made its proposal and one in the afternoon after the owners discussed it.

"We players feel we're taking steps to bridge the gap," union president Patrick Ewing said. "Now the ball is in their court to take steps to get closer to us."

The union's luxury tax proposal would require owners to pay a tax on certain exorbitant contracts, such as the $126 million, six-year extension signed by Kevin Garnett of the Minnesota Timberwolves last year when he was just 20.

Players focus time, energy on weight room; coach says players getting stronger, faster

BY NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While running back Frank Murphy was out serving a four-game suspension, he still was practicing with the team and training in the weight room. Murphy tried to improve himself and participated in extra conditioning.

"He worked very hard during the four weeks he couldn't play," K-State strength coach Rod Cole said. "During that time, he spent extra time in the weight room."

Cole said the effects of K-State's strength-and-conditioning program on the team's performance is difficult to measure.

"It is a piece of the puzzle," he said. "I mean, you can't quantify how much a percentage of it is."

Defensive back Dyshod Carter said weight lifting has a tremendous effect on the college game.

"It's a big factor on how you perform on the field, because in college, guys are stronger and faster," Carter said. "If you are not strong yourself, they're going to run over you out there."

Cole, who arrived as an assistant at K-State in 1993, said the program has made great strides since then. When he arrived, 10 players could safe-squat 800 pounds or more. Now, the team has 35 players lifting that weight.

Speed wise, the team also has made steady improvements, Cole said. In 1993, the Cats had 17 or 18 players run a 4.59 or faster in the 40-yard dash. Today, they have 30 athletes breaking that barrier.

Junior linebacker Mark Simoneau has excelled in the weight room, Cole said. Simoneau came out of high school strong and athletic and has improved steadily.

"He has been our lifter of the year two years in a row and has done a tremendous job," Cole said.

Simoneau's athletic numbers include a 4.4 flat in the 40, a power clean of 390 pounds, a bench of 450 pounds and a safe-squat of 911 pounds. Simoneau said weight lifting is a necessary part of the team's preparation.

"It's essential. I think in today's age, everybody is strong and fast, and you've got to do your work in the weight room," Simoneau said.

During the season, players are split into three groups. Cole said younger players and reserves are placed in the construction crew, which lifts four days a week.

"It's kind of a scaled back off-season program," he said. "When they're younger and they're still developing, they can gain a lot during the season."

Defensive lineman DeVane Robinson, a redshirt freshman, said the construction program and extra lifting he did last season was beneficial to his improvement.

"That was the year for me to get stronger," Robinson said.

Todd Weiner, a former K-State football player now with the Seattle Seahawks, went from 225 pounds when he arrived in Manhattan to 300 pounds his senior season, and his vertical jump increased by five inches.

The team's lifts are geared toward Olympic lifts and being quick off the line when they play.

K-State's off-season program is also extensive, and Cole said to be competitive, a player has to be dedicated. Simoneau said Cole does an excellent job improving K-State's players.

Cole is in charge of the entire strength program, with more than 500 athletes in the university's different sports.

His two main assistants, Scott Gadeken and Marty Lehman, along with their assistants, oversee K-State's strength program. Cole said the strength program's results are not a work of magic, rather a reminder of the quality of K-State's athletes.

"We're not doing anything magical," Cole said.

"We simply have better athletes since we've started winning ball games. We recruit better players, and if we recruit better players, we get better overall."

Colorado can keep its bad attitude — I'll settle for the Cats and a national championship

VIEWPOINT

JON BALMER

First, let me clarify that this is, in no way a knock on the entire community of Boulder, Colo. Some of the people I encountered were intelligent, courteous and generally interesting.

But there were plenty of Boulder folk from the other side of the tracks who left me bidding a fond farewell to the Rockies.

You know the kind of ignorant individual of whom I'm speaking. I'm sure the Little Apple has its own small community of conceited individuals who tarnish the otherwise well-mannered nature of Mannytown.

Regardless, my virgin voyage into the town that gave us "Mork & Mindy" left a bad taste in my mouth. From my first step into the University of Colorado press box to my final comment heard in a Boulder tavern, there was plenty to dislike about the town of Boulder.

Before I dwell on the negatives, I've got to assert my optimistic nature and mention the good side of Boulder. The college itself was quite impressive, and the way Folsom Field blends into the campus is very, very classy. Beyond this, the prevailing attitude of the town's residents was enough to erase the good side of Boulder.

I guess if I was a fan of a university desperately clinging to a national championship earned seven years ago, I would be a little hostile towards the new contender in town.

Nonetheless, CU fans spared no cheap shot in order to elevate their lack of self-confidence.

I think the best question I heard directed towards one of my friends was, "Do they have trees in Kansas?" Of course, this wouldn't be served up properly without another witty zinger targeting our "Wizard of Oz" heritage. I tell ya, that Dorothy joke gets fresher every time.

As hard as it may be to fathom, all of these comments came before the teams took the field. Once the game commenced, the Boulder fans showed their true colors. Their greatest demonstration of football knowledge came on the decisive play, when the fans decided to boo the referees after the Buffs put 12 men on the field. Of course, the zebras must be at fault! Who are they to say how many men should be on the field?

As if the display of the CU faithful (who, by the way, were drowned out by the sea of purple that made the road trip) wasn't enough, the ignorance spread to even the supposedly unbiased news media of the Rocky Mountains.

After a nice eight-hour trek to Boulder, the one thing that warms my heart is a sarcastic sportswriter.

His comments about student publications gave me that feeling that everything was all right, because I was in the presence of a jack-ass.

Even the media table had to assert its dominance over the visitors from Manhattan by valiantly refusing to hand over the press releases "until the time is right." By returning to my seat and learning one should never request a stat packet, I learned a valuable lesson in Colorado manners.

My trip wouldn't have been complete without a visit from the incompetent. Imagine following a hotel employee's directions to another branch of the hotel he says is host to the friends you're searching for, only to find that it doesn't exist. Then picture yourself returning to the human compass and convincing him, after a five-minute argument, that he's wrong.

Upon this realization, the little light bulb flickered over his head as he discovered that HIS hotel was host to the party you were looking for.

Yes, the sure-minded directions of the locals left me with a certain yearning for the companionship of Rand McNally.

After all the performers of Pearl Street were behind me and the constant reminders of "South Park's" roots were beyond my eyesight, I have to say Boulder will not be missed. Sure, it has its sights, and the small percentage of decent inhabitants made some case for the community, but I can't say I would give Boulder a ringing endorsement.

You can have your guitar-strumming coach and his legion of conceited fans. I'll stick with a respectful community and its eventual national champion.

Yankees clinch American League pennant

By RONALD BLUM
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Revenge is complete. The American League pennant is back in the Bronx.

Yankee Stadium rocked long and hard Tuesday night, as New York reached the World Series for a record 35th time by beating the Cleveland Indians 9-5 to win the AL championship series in six games.

It was a little strange and a little sloppy.

Scott Brosius seemed to finish Cleveland off with a three-run homer for a 6-0 lead in the third inning, but David Cone nearly gave it all back, allowing a grand slam to Jim Thome that pulled the Indians within a run.

Derek Jeter then restored the safety margin with a two-run triple in the sixth, a drive to right that Manny Ramirez tried to snag with a leap at the top of the wall — the ball landed on a hop at his feet.

New York, which opens the World Series at home Saturday night against Atlanta or San Diego, won an AL title at home for the first time since the Reggie Jackson-Thurman Munson-Ron Guidry team in 1978.

Cleveland, which beat the Yankees in the first round last year and came within two outs of winning its first World Series since 1948, failed to force a seventh game because it allowed five unearned runs.

Other game highlights: another controversial umpiring call, a line drive that hit an umpire on the backside and a pumped-up crowd who took every opportunity to make up for the taunts David Wells endured in Cleveland last week.

After going 114-48 during the regular season and sweeping Texas in the first round, the Yankees felt pressure to reach the Series, which they won in 1996.

Cleveland felt pressure, too, after losing Game 7 of the World Series to Florida last October. After falling behind two games to one, New York turned it around at Jacobs Field behind strong pitching from Orlando "El Duque" Hernandez in Game 4 and by Wells in Game 5.

By the eighth inning, fans were taunting the Indians with chants of "1948." Responding to a remark by Cleveland's David Justice that the only way Yankees fans could get tougher would be if they brought Uzis to the ballpark, one fan hung pictures of a machine gun from the upper deck for each strikeout by Cone, who fanned eight.

Umpires again were in the center of controversy. Ted Hendry, the second-base umpire, appeared to blow a call in the third inning, ruling New York's Chili Davis safe on a force play, claiming Omar Vizquel was pulled off the base by the throw. Two outs later, Brosius' homer made it 6-0.

Brosius' homer came after Williams' leadoff single and the controversial call by Hendry. Davis grounded to second, and Enrique Wilson's throw to second for the force was wide to the shortstop side. While Vizquel appeared to keep a foot on the bag, Hendry called Davis safe.

Cleveland starter Charles Nagy, who took the loss, quickly got in trouble, and Cleveland fell behind on consecutive one-out singles in the first by Jeter, Paul O'Neill and Williams. Davis followed with a sacrifice fly.

New York made it 3-0 in the second on an error by left fielder Brian Giles. Joe Girardi singled with one out, Chuck Knoblauch doubled into the left-field corner and Giles, after picking up the ball, let it fall out of his glove.

Cone took a shutout into the fifth. After singles by Wilson and Kenny Lofton put runners on first and third, Vizquel hit a liner up the middle that hit Hendry in the rear end. Lofton remained on third instead of scoring and a walk to Justice forced in a run. After fanning Ramirez, Cone gave up the grand slam to Thome, who set an AL championship series record with his fourth homer.

New ambassadors to help with recruiting, retention

BY AMANDA LEVIN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fourteen new leadership positions have been developed for K-State students as Housing and Dining Ambassadors.

The Department of Housing and Dining Services is committed to the recruitment and retention efforts in the residence halls, and the new ambassadors will work to further these efforts, said Dana Grant Catania, enrollment management and residence life coordinator for Housing and Dining Services.

Catania developed the new ambassador positions that started this semester.

"It is a great way for students to hear from other students what living in the residence halls is really like," Catania said.

The ambassadors will assist with on- and off-campus recruitment events, be host to prospective students, facilitate quality of life and other pertinent research and help coordinate individual hall recruitment teams.

"Since this is the program's first year, we are experimenting to see what areas of recruitment and retention the ambassadors need to focus on," Catania said.

"IT'S GREAT MEETING DIFFERENT PEOPLE AND BEING ABLE TO SHARE MY EXPERIENCES WITH THEM."

– CARRIE CONDRY
HOUSING AND DINING AMBASSADOR

Carrie Condry, senior in interior design, is one of the 14 ambassadors. Condry attended K-State Celebrates, an annual recruitment effort on Sept. 10 in Johnson County.

"It's great meeting different people and being able to share my experiences at K-State with them," Condry said. "They are all so excited about possibly coming to K-State, and they have so many questions."

The most frequently asked questions from parents are about safety and the prices of different residence hall aspects, Condry said. Students want to know how big the rooms are, what to bring and what college life is about, she said.

To become a Housing and Dining Ambassador, a student must have two semesters of residence hall living, be a current resident in a residence hall while an ambassador, be in good residence hall standing, and have a minimum 2.5 cumulative grade point average.

"The ambassador positions are great opportunities for students who enjoy living in the residence halls to gain leadership skills and help prospective students choose the residence-life experience," Catania said.

Catania said ambassador applications will be accepted in the spring for the next school year.

Supreme Court allows Cincinnati to deny specific protection for gays

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Supreme Court allowed Cincinnati to deny gay people specific protection from discrimination Tuesday in a case that seemed to contradict a ruling the court made two years ago.

The action, after the justices struck down a similar measure in Colorado in 1996 as unconstitutional, likely will create confusion over government policies on gay rights.

Unlike the earlier ruling, Tuesday's action set no national precedent, but it caused outrage just the same.

"The Supreme Court has given up. That's horrible," said Alphonse Gerhardstein, who represented opponents to the Cincinnati city charter amendment.

The voter-approved measure bans policies or ordinances that give homosexuals claims for legal protection from discrimination — in housing, employment or otherwise — based on their sexual orientation. It also bars "any claim of minority or protected status, quota preference or other preferential treatment."

In rejecting a challenge to that amendment, Gerhardstein said, the highest court has let Cincinnati "remain as the only community in America where discrimination against gay people is institutionalized in the city charter."

What real-world effect, if any, the amended city charter will have is contested. Most cities and states offer no protection against bias based on sexual orientation.

The 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld Cincinnati's amended charter provision, ruling that it "merely removed municipally enacted special protection from gays and lesbians." Tuesday's order left that ruling intact. But three justices, in an unusual step, played down the order's significance.

Writing for the three, Justice John Paul Stevens said, "The confusion over the proper construction of the city charter counsels against granting (review)." He was joined by Justices David H. Souter and Ruth Bader Ginsburg.

The court's six other members wrote nothing, offering no insights into their votes.

Phil Burress, who led the move to put the city charter amendment on the 1993 ballot, claimed victory.

"What it tells me is that the only thing Colorado did wrong was go statewide rather than city by city," he said.

But Matt Coles of the American Civil Liberties Union disagreed, saying, "This action doesn't undermine (the 1996 ruling) a whit."

Suzanne B. Goldberg of the gay-rights Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund said, "This is clearly not the end of the battle for equal rights in Cincinnati."

Gay-rights advocates won a dramatic victory two years ago when the Supreme Court threw out a Colorado state constitutional amendment that forbade state and local laws protecting homosexuals from discrimination. The amendment unlawfully singled out gays and sought to "make them unequal to everyone else," the court ruled then.

In Cincinnati, gay-rights advocates succeeded in 1994 in barring enforcement of the city charter measure, but the appeals court lifted a trial judge's injunction.

The Supreme Court had been urged to reverse the appeals court ruling because, they were told, it "will encourage targeting of gay people and other groups for unconstitutional harm."

Craig Karges, illusionist, removes part of his blindfold during his show Tuesday evening at the Union Little Theatre. Karges performed many mind-reading techniques throughout the evening, including words, drawings, serial numbers and even birthdays.

NOW YOU SEE IT... NOW YOU DON'T

Illusionist awes some audience members, but others still doubt mind-reading ability Watch out, David Copperfield. There might be a little competition coming your way.

Armed with his slight-of-hand and his apparent ability to read minds, illusionist Craig Karges managed to leave his audience slightly dazed and definitely amazed after Tuesday night's performance at the Union Little Theatre.

Karges, who said he prefers the term "illusionist" rather than "magician," has entertained crowds from businesses, universities and theaters since 1980. His degree in communications has helped him in his appearances on "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno," "Larry King Live," and CNN Headline News.

"I use a lot of variety in my shows and change things around," Karges said.

Throughout the show, members of the audience were given chances to test Karges' supposed psychic skills. After a few correctly guessed names and telephone numbers in his act's opening, the crowd definitely was hooked.

"I am befuddled," John Dowell, sophomore in civil engineering, said. "He really has a creative act."

Dowell and Marni Fisher, both resident assistants in Moore Hall, were brought on stage at different points to assist Karges with different tricks. Dowell lent a hand in the show's final illusion, in which Karges put his abilities to the test and his paycheck at risk. After sealing his payment in one of three envelopes and allowing Dowell to shuffle, Karges was forced to choose which was the right envelope — then destroy the others.

While Dowell was impressed with the results, Fisher was left with a few doubts.

"I think he was cheating," said Fisher, senior in math and psychology. During one segment of his act, Karges asked Fisher to place two coins, five strips of adhesive tape and a blindfold over his eyes as he was presented with objects to describe. Fisher placed an extra piece of tape on Karges' face to make sure he couldn't peek.

"He moved the tape after I put it on his face," Fisher said.

Karges said he is not often approached about cheating. After one performance, a family approached him after the show to ask questions. While the mother reprimanded her child for playing with Karges' props, her husband had turned over a table that had been levitated during the act, searching for hidden strings or wires.

"I listen to people's doubts and try to incorporate them into my act to disprove them," Karges said.

Perhaps any questions about Karges' act could be answered in his book, which should be in stores sometime next spring.

At the end of the show, Karges said he used psychology just as much as illusion to captivate his crowd. However, a person's ability to get into the act depends on their ability to imagine that such things are possible, he said.

"Your mind is limited only by your imagination," Karges told the audience in his closing statement. "Just like my performance."

Theater Review

Set, costumes distract from action of 'Antigone'

BY RUSSELL FORTMEYER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

SHOW INFO
K-State Theatre's production of "Antigone" is at 8 p.m. in Nichols Theatre. It runs through Saturday night.

There's a political thriller brewing in Manhattan.

On one side is a leader who maintains a system of carefully constructed lies and facades meant for the greater good; the other is his support group of friends and family who ultimately are forced to ruination by their leader's callous determination to stick to his principles.

No, it's not the story of President Clinton and his cabinet — rather it is K-State Theatre's production of "Antigone." The 1943 Jean Anouilh play, based on the Sophocles original and directed by Charlotte MacFarland, continues tonight through Saturday in Nichols Theatre.

The true test of a play like "Antigone" is whether it can keep the eyelids of the typical college student up long enough to discover the deep meanings in a challenging play. If Thursday's opening night was any indication, this production doesn't always succeed in maintaining the necessary energy to accomplish this.

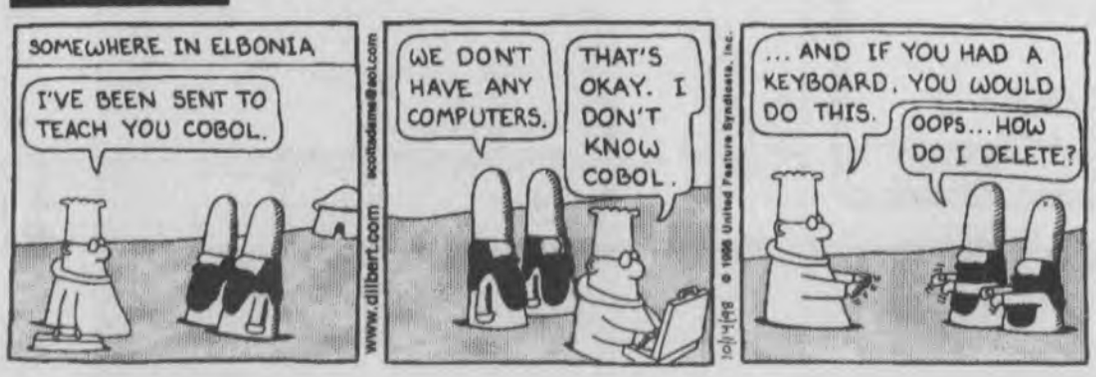
Trees placed on the stage's corners disrupt the view. The color scheme for set and costumes, purposely kept opposed in black, white and grey, is less striking than it is gloomy. It's difficult to stay engaged in a play that provides many of its own alternate distractions. The trees, the one-man chorus sitting in the audience and the character wrapping the set into a web of white string too easily divert attention from the action. While all symbolic gestures on some level, the scarcity of real action on the stage encourages distraction and muddled meaning.

Furthermore, a distracting quality of teenage melodrama accompanies a few members of the cast, infusing some lines with a campy, "Beverly Hills 90210" limpishness. Aside from Creon and Antigone, few in the cast seem truly motivated by their characters' dire situation.

The story of Antigone is the last segment of the story of Oedipus, the tragic Greek figure who was fated to kill his father and marry his mother. His children, among them Antigone, are left to rule his city of Thebes. The play deals with Antigone's decision to bury her brother Polynices, who tried to take over the city from his brother Eteocles.

Ultimately, she must face the consequences — death — associated with disobeying the king, her uncle Creon, who has ordered Polynices be left to rot.

Creon urges Antigone to lie and hide the fact she buried Polynices, in order to spare her life. She refuses on principle and eventually hangs herself when shut into a cave to die.



Vanessa L. Vaughn delivers a fine performance in the title role, as does Ben Hensley as Creon. Vaughn's fierceness doesn't really come alive until she is matched with Hensley's cunning maneuvering. The lone chorus, B.J. Wycoff, is simple and effective, if a bit unwelcome in his coziness with the audience. Brad Good, as one of Creon's guards, is perhaps another actor who has discovered something about his character and shares it, but this excellence is all too rare.

Unfortunately, the lack of dynamism in this production fails to serve the interests of the play's meaning. There are rich parallels to contemporary society hiding beneath the play's surface that are unapparent.

In K-State's production, the play's universal themes have become its saving grace.

Student's death ignites anti-gay incidents

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LARAMIE, Wyo. — The killing of Matthew Shepard, a gay University of Wyoming student who was pistol-whipped and tied to a post, has inspired outbursts of anti-gay hatred, including an anonymous e-mail applauding the attack and an offensive parade float.

The movement toward hate crimes legislation after Shepard's slaying is the kind of political shift that will draw out those with strong anti-gay feelings, according to hate crimes experts and advocates for gay rights.

"The reactions in these kinds of triggering events are predictable but invisible," Valerie Jenness, professor of sociology at University of California, Irvine, said. "No one will say, 'I hate these people,' but it serves to confirm homophobic sentiments (exist)."

Wyoming officials were bracing for the arrival of members of a Topeka church that regularly engages in anti-homosexual picketing; they are planning to demonstrate Friday at Shepard's funeral in Casper.

Gov. Jim Geringer said officials cannot stop the group from Westboro Baptist from coming to Casper, but he wants them to know their presence is not wanted.

"What we don't need is a bunch of wingnuts coming in," Geringer said.

Shepard, 21, died at a Fort Collins, Colo., hospital Monday after spending several days in a coma.

His skull was fractured so badly by the beating that doctors said surgery was not an option.

He was found last Wednesday after enduring near-freezing temperatures for up to 18 hours, lashed to a split-rail post outside Laramie. He had been pistol-whipped after being lured from a campus bar by two men who told him they were gay, authorities said.

Police say robbery was the main motive for the attack, but Shepard apparently was chosen in part because he was gay.

The Shepard killing has drawn nationwide attention, including President Clinton's call for Congress to pass legislation making it easier for federal prosecution of hate crimes.

While some said they hope Shepard's death will lead to stronger hate crimes laws, to others he is a symbol for an unwelcome way of life.

Fort Collins police were investigating a violently worded e-mail received Monday by at least two gay and lesbian groups.

Police were trying to find the source of the e-mail, which applauded Shepard's killing and closed with the words: "I hope it happens more often."

The e-mail was discovered Monday morning by Brenda Hervey, executive director of the Rainbow Chorus, a choir that combines gay and straight performers.

"My first thought was that somebody had been letting me know he (Shepard) had died early this morning," Hervey said. "Then when I clicked to open the message and began reading, I was just sickened."

Members of the Lambda Community Center, a gay and lesbian support organization, received the same message.

Authorities in Fort Collins also were trying to find out how a scarecrow that mocked homosexuals appeared on a Colorado State University homecoming parade float Saturday while Shepard lay dying in a nearby hospital.

Charges against Russell Arthur Henderson, 21, and Aaron James McKinney, 22, were upgraded late Monday to first-degree murder, aggravated robbery and kidnapping with intent to inflict bodily injury or terrorize the victim. They were ordered held without bond.

The murder count carries a possible death sentence; prosecutors haven't said whether they will seek the death penalty.

Budget bargainers narrow issues for agreement

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Their differences dwindling but still knotty, White House and congressional budget bargainers hunted for agreement Tuesday on schools, family planning and other issues snarling a massive $500 billion bill for the new fiscal year.

Though Republicans were ready to provide the $1.1 billion President Clinton was demanding to reduce grade-school class sizes, the two sides fought over key details. Clinton wanted the money specifically set aside for hiring 100,000 teachers; Republicans wanted states to choose how to spend it and wanted money set aside for special education teachers.

Democrats also wanted to require most federal workers' health plans to cover prescription contraceptives, but Republicans wanted to let insurers opt out if they had moral objections. And Clinton — joined by Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D. — was continuing to insist on billions of dollars more for farmers reeling under plummeting crop prices.

With the Nov. 3 congressional elections approaching, Republicans clearly were aching to get back to their districts to defend their House and Senate majorities.

"It's time to get back and campaign," said Rep. John Linder, R-Ga., chairman of the House GOP's campaign committee.

With Clinton spending a fourth straight day calling for more education spending, Democrats were happy to be seen as fighting in Washington on behalf of schoolchildren.

"It's important people understand what Democrats are for," said Rep. Martin Frost, D-Texas, leader of the House Democrats' campaign committee.

As a deal seemed to draw near, lawmakers from both parties searched for wins and losses in a package that seemed likely to give Clinton most of the extra spending he has wanted and triumphs for both sides on policy disputes.

Democrats said they were worried that administration bargainers would settle for less than Clinton was demanding for teachers, school construction and family planning.

They were also unhappy with a deal between the administration and GOP negotiators that in effect would lay aside for six months the fight over whether scientific sampling would be used in the 2000 census.

"We are not in agreement yet with any arrangement or any bill," said House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo. "There is not a bill yet."

At a GOP leadership meeting, House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., asked his colleagues for support for a measure he said would contain victories for both sides, Rep. David McIntosh, R-Ind., said.

"Earlier this week, I wasn't optimistic we'd win on many issues but now it's truly up for grabs," McIntosh, a conservative leader, said.

At stake was a giant bill covering nearly a third of federal spending for the new fiscal year, including the departments of Health and Human Services, Agriculture, State and Interior. Of the 13 spending bills for the new year, the eight unfinished ones are being packaged together.

Fiscal 1999 began Oct. 1, and a third measure temporarily keeping many federal workers at their jobs expires Wednesday night. If the mammoth overall bill is not complete, lawmakers are likely to pass yet another stopgap bill for a day or two.

In a draw for the two sides, Gingrich told GOP leaders that two contentious issues were being removed from the package, said a participant in that meeting who spoke on condition of anonymity.

PROJECT

members participated, they received points toward winning the greek system's homecoming contest.

The annual competition groups sororities and fraternities into 11 pairings. Those groups work together in the event.

At a committee meeting of homecoming chairs Thursday night, each pairing received one vote in the 10-1 decision to kill Paint It Purple. By doing so, the committee eliminated the community-service portion, which is worth the most points of the competition.

Lindsey Roy, Panhellenic Council president, said the program was canceled to keep area charities from expecting workers who wouldn't appear.

"We just weren't able to fulfill what we had promised," Roy said. "And in a way, to quit going to those organizations and doing things halfway, we decided to go ahead and stop now ... instead of having their workers come in on a Saturday when we weren't getting the participation we had hoped for."

Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils each approved $500 donations to United Way to compensate for canceling the program.

Last year, all greek houses performed their service projects on the same weekend. This year, the event was stretched over six weeks; each house had a certain day to report for its project.

Homecoming chairs from various houses said several reasons contributed to the poor attendance. Home football games kept turnout low. Some didn't show up at all.

Other members went to the service project, signed the roster and left — without completing the work.

United Way Executive Director Ailleen Cray said the charities were disappointed that the event wasn't a success.

"I think everybody was probably disappointed that this was the way it went," she said.

Robel said the home football schedule was a big reason for low numbers. She said she supported the decision to cancel Paint It Purple.

"With all of the home games in September ... the time commitment was probably more than we should've tried to handle," Robel said. "It was better to go ahead ... and let the agency know ahead of time that we can't provide the manpower."

Even with low attendance, Delta Chi fraternity president Mike Sarow said the rules shouldn't have been changed in the middle of the game. Delta Chi, along with homecoming partners Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity and Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, cast the lone vote for keeping the program alive.

"I think the greek system really blew it," Sarow said.

"It doesn't really bother me that we're not getting the points for homecoming. That's not the real issue.

"It's the fact that 75 percent of the greek houses decided to blow it off for one reason or another. There were a few different reasons why people didn't do it, but the main reason was they didn't want to," he said.

Some of the votes cast at Thursday's meeting were by houses who had failed to meet their Paint It Purple attendance requirement and had fallen behind in the homecoming point race. Sarow said it was obvious how those groups would cast their votes.

"Of course, if you're given the opportunity to get out of an activity that either, one, you missed, or two, you don't want to do, you're going to vote to get rid of it. That kind of vote will pass every time," Sarow said.

Though a vote on those motives is possible, Roy said it's not likely that house members' votes were based solely on the homecoming contest. That didn't happen, she said.

Kellie McClellan, public relations director for Panhellenic Council, said the homecoming chairs' decision was the best solution.

"We thought that this was looking bad for the greek community, and it wasn't helping us. The point was to go out and do something nice for the community, but we thought it was hurting us more than it was helping us," McClellan said.

This year's greek homecoming won't include any points for community service, though service could be included again next year. Robel said greeks evaluate homecoming after each year. Paint It Purple definitely will be discussed, she said.

In the residence halls, students will continue to do community-service projects with United Way as part of homecoming, Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls president Nick Lander said. The halls compete against each other but are separate from fraternities and sororities.

unless it's in writing, what guarantee do citizens have?" Murphy said.

Under the living-wage proposal, the resolution would take effect by January. Commissioners decided not to place the living-wage issue on next week's ballot.

"Before we adopt any similar resolution, I'd like to look at what the impact of those projects will be. I never vote on anything that I don't know what I'm voting for," Mayor Steve Hall said.

Commissioner Ed Klimek said he was against the proposal because it would place a burden on free enterprise, with the city telling employers how much to pay employees.

Another issue discussed between MEDOFAB representatives and the commission was whether the board should continue sending votes to the commission for each applicant.

Proposals might be almost perfect but get a no vote due to details the board couldn't tell the commission about, board member Eugene Klingler said.

"I don't think anybody's scared to vote, but it's not a very good way of showing what's going on," Klingler said.

The commission agreed to ask the board to include personal assessments of each proposal, in addition to votes.

The commission also discussed how to judge the success of previous development applicants. Criteria for projects center on the number of jobs created.

"I would only argue that we have focused too much on just jobs," McCulloh said.

The Powercat isn't just for K-State anymore.

Some high schools across the nation are sporting K-State's copyright logo.

Because of K-State football's rise in fame, more schools with mascots such as tigers, cougars and wildcats are clamoring to use K-State's Powercat as their symbol. Seven schools in Kansas are licensed to use the logo on their uniforms, playing fields and other items. Twenty-six schools across the nation are officially licensed to use the symbol.

K-State is one of nearly 160 U.S. universities that uses the Collegiate Licensing Company in Atlanta to protect its copyright Powercat logo and the name "Kansas State University." The company also is used to control which products can come into the market with the copyright symbols.

"One of the major reasons we went to licensing was all of the dangerous merchandise that was on the market," said John Fairman, assistant vice president for institutional advancement. Fairman supervises K-State's licensing program.

He said many of the items were not complying with industry standards for safety and quality.

"The licensing company looks at proposed products and sees that they meet or exceed industry standards," he said.

When high schools' requests to use the Powercat began coming into Fairman's office, the university was worried the school would lose control of the logo.

"Initially, we were concerned about protecting the mark," Fairman said. "We discussed it with our licensing company, and they advised us to not let other universities use the logo and to not let high schools use it. However, we decided that use of the logo by high schools would be OK as long as we had a contract to protect us."

Claflin High School in Claflin, Kan., southwest of Salina, is one school that has been granted permission to use the logo. Athletic Director Pat Stiles said the popularity of K-State's football team led the small school district to apply for permission to use it.

The Claflin Wildcats, whose colors are purple and white as well, gradually have phased in the Powercat logo as they have replaced uniforms and other items.

"It's used pretty much around here," Stiles said. "It's just amazing how much stuff you can buy that has the logo on it."

Another school that has recently switched to the symbol is Haven High School, in Haven, Kan., between Hutchinson and Wichita.

Haven applied for the logo in August. The school's mascot is the Wildcat, but its colors are black and gold. Assistant Superintendent Rick White said the popularity of the K-State football team was a factor in the decision to use the Powercat.

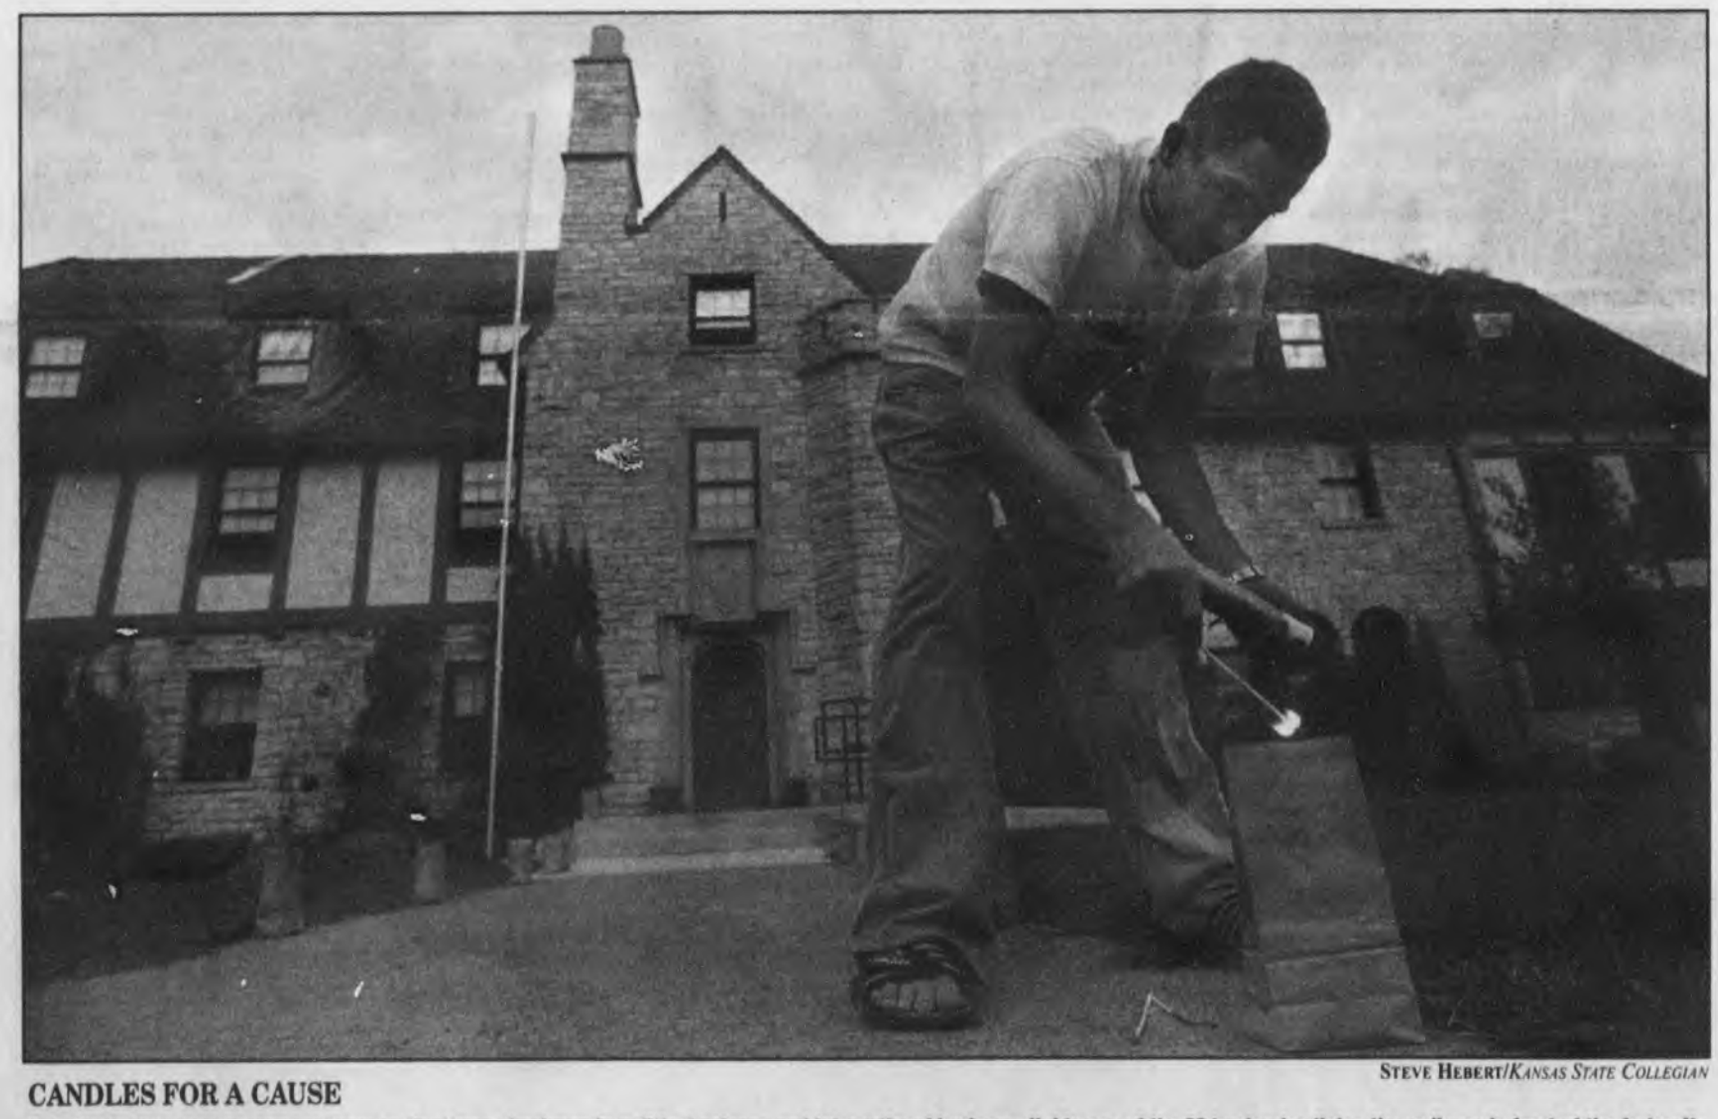
"The football coaches wanted it because it was appealing," White said. "Overall, I think the students like it and are proud of the logo."

The application process to use the Powercat is fairly simple. Schools interested in using the logo contact Fairman's office and first discuss their proposal with him.

The usage contract only costs $1 and covers only the use of the logo by the school for non-profit reasons.

If the school wants to sell merchandise with the logo on it for fund-raisers, it must buy the merchandise through licensed vendors and remit 8 percent of the wholesale profit to K-State. If a licensed vendor is unavailable in the school's area, the school may be granted permission for a printer to print merchandise. However, the printer also must send 8 percent of the profits to the university for the use of the logo.

Some schools, though, might be using the logo and are either unaware that they need permission or are intentionally using it without permission. Fairman and his staff routinely get calls from concerned alumni across the nation who see the Powercat symbol used at high schools. Fairman's staff checks the list of legally licensed schools and notifies offenders if they are in violation.



"We try to be the 'good guys,'" Fairman said.

For the most part, schools that violate the rules usually sign the $1 contract and are then licensed legally. However, copyright infringement is a serious offense carrying several penalties. Schools may be fined and required to surrender all merchandise with the logo on it to the university to either destroy or donate to charity.

"It is against the law, and people may be taken to court for violations. However, 99 percent of the time it never goes that far," Fairman said.

Some schools even have attempted to alter the Powercat logo and pass it off as a new mascot. For example, Carthage High School in Carthage, Mo., has a

Beta Theta Pi fraternity member Brandon Kauffman, freshman in political science and international business, lights one of the 20 luminarias lining the walkway in front of the fraternity house on Sunset Avenue on Wednesday afternoon. Greek houses around campus lit luminarias to symbolize the number of people in Kansas between the ages of 18 and 24 who have died in drunk-driving related accidents this year. The lighting is part of the National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week, which promotes respect for the law and personal responsibility regarding alcohol consumption.

Plan changes enrollment prioritization

By AMANDA LEVIN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Convenience was the goal behind changes in the enrollment program for the upcoming spring semester, Registrar Don Foster said.

Enrollment for next semester will begin Oct. 26. Students will be grouped by their year classification and assigned a certain day to enroll, Foster said.

Each classification will be divided into alphabetical groups. Seniors have five alphabetical groups, juniors have four, sophomores have four and freshmen have five.

The groups will be rotated every semester so each group has a chance to enroll first within their year classification. This new system will allow 1,000 students to enroll each day.

This new system differs from the previous system, which used students classification and their number of credit hours to determine enrollment dates. The new system will cause some students' enrollment dates to be later, even though they have more credit hours than students earlier in the alphabet.

"Last year I enrolled earlier than I will be able to this year — and just because of my last name," said Monica Kemper, senior in accounting and finance. "I think the credit hours should have some influence over who enrolls first."

The credit-hour system still is preferred by some.

"I've only enrolled once, but I think the system should be to enroll by credit hours rather than by their last name," said Jason Yoxall, freshman in pre-professional elementary education.

Enrollment by credit hours was seen as a reward to students who had more hours.

"I think that by enrolling by credit hours, the people who worked hard get somewhat of a reward," said Tanya Werner, senior in sports medicine. "This new way doesn't even recognize our efforts."

Athletic department steps up fund-raising, but donations not required for stadium seats

URICK

By JEFF SUTTON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Football season-ticket holders won't be required to donate money to the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund to guarantee their seats.

Suggested donations now will be voluntary.

"Under Plan 2000, we request that season-ticket holders expand their support of K-State athletics by making a contribution to the Mike Ahearn Scholarship fund based on their seat locations," Athletic Director Max Urick said.

Urick said that Plan 2000 does not include funding the expansion of KSU Stadium and that donations will go to the scholarship fund. The plan is in place to increase fund-raising so that the 380 student athletes in 15 K-State sports will remain competitive in the Big 12 Conference and on the national level, Urick said. Currently, K-State ranks ninth in the Big 12 in both fund-raising money donated and athletic operating budget.

"In planning for the future, we know we have to increase the different areas of revenue to stay competitive and to improve our programs like we should," Urick said.

Donors will be be given priority over non-donors when improved seating becomes available, however. The current plan asks fans sitting in sections two through eight, 23, 30, or 31 to donate from $75 to $300 a seat, depending on the seat's location.

"We don't think the prices, when you look at the figures, are really prohibitive compared with our peers at other schools," Urick said.

K-State's $14.7 million athletic department budget is less than half of the University of Nebraska's $32 million.

Urick said he thinks donations will continue to increase.

"I've got to believe with the great support and loyalty we have, if people understand and we can communicate effectively what our needs are, we'll get a terrific amount of support for this effort," he said. "I'm very encouraged at the responses we've had from people so far."

In order to communicate well, the department plans to send mailings to season-ticket holders and to begin small focus groups.

"We'll have to keep nurturing this," Urick said. "We'll be appealing to those who don't donate, and we'll continue to upgrade our benefits that we are able to provide for those that do contribute."

The department is going to assess how much money is raised before any changes are made that could make donations mandatory.

"Basically, we didn't feel the time was right for that right now," Kathy Duggan, development officer, said. "We're going to take it year by year. At this point, we don't see it going mandatory."

Budget bargainers iron out final details

By ALAN FRAM
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — White House and congressional budget bargainers all but completed agreement Wednesday on a $500 billion package of spending for education and other programs, Republican lawmakers said. Democrats claimed victory in their quest for education money but cautioned there's not a deal yet.

The two sides seemed to have worked out most differences over what had been their highest-profile dispute, participants said. They agreed to give President Clinton the $1.1 billion he wanted for hiring 100,000 new teachers, though Republicans won concessions that the money could also be used for special education and for teacher training.

"I am very happy the Republicans have come to our position" on education, said House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo.

Disagreements remained over details of how the Unkempt records could hurt DB92 privilege fee

By ELIZABETH SCHOFIELD
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Recent questions have arisen about management and bookkeeping practices at KSDB-FM 91.9. The station manager was placed on administrative leave while officials from the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications compile financial records and prepare for an appearance before the Student Senate Privilege Fee Committee the first week of November.

Station Manager Len Potillo was placed on administrative leave as of Sept. 25. He receives his contractual salary but does not work while on leave. Graduate assistant Candy Walton has assumed Potillo's duties as interim station manager.

Early indications from representatives of the journalism school and the KSDB Advisory Board point to financial problems as part of the decision to place Potillo on leave.

"Basically, we have yet to go through all that," said Todd Simon, director of the journalism school. "There hasn't been accounting or record keeping in the normal sense."

Simon is working with Walton to produce a budget report to present to the Privilege Fee

Local theater to add new screens, parking

Seth Child Cinema will be home to six new screens, increased parking and an additional concession stand when a $2-million expansion project is completed next April.

"We started the expansion a month ago," said Bill Bailey, project manager of the expansion. "The project should be done in about seven months."

Carmike Cinemas, currently the largest motion picture exhibitor in the United States, prompted the expansion. Carmike currently has 513 theaters across the United States, with two other theaters in Kansas.

The expansion will make Seth Child Cinema larger than the Carmike-owned Westloop Theatre, the only other screens in Manhattan.

"They currently have six screens, and they're going to add six more — essentially doubling their size," Manhattan building official Brad Claussen said.

The 20,000-square-foot project will be on the building's north side, and 50 percent more parking space will be added. The new screens will have 938 new seats.

"There's a great demand for movie-going in Manhattan," said Grant Howe, freshman in business administration. "It will create more opportunity for more people to attend the premieres."

Education task force clarifies focus, goals

TOPEKA — Gov. Bill Graves' Task Force on Higher Education Excellence had its task more clearly defined Wednesday during a panel discussion before the Legislative Educational Planning Committee.

Ken Havner, a member of the Kansas Board of Regents from Hays, cited five areas of disagreement among the state's institutions of higher learning on how to achieve greater coordination.

His list crystallized differences the governor's task force must overcome if it is to submit a plan to Graves by next month for improving higher education coordination in Kansas.

Graves' task force will consider at its Nov. 5 meeting a proposal by the 25 presidents and chancellor of the state's universities and community colleges.

They proposed creating a state agency for higher education — yet to be named — that would be charged with coordinating 11 facets of institutional administration.

They are master planning, developing institutional mission statements, developing performance indicators, approving degree programs, conducting program reviews, exploring possibilities for affiliations and mergers, coordinating off-campus courses, administering student financial assistance programs, creating a student information system, making budget recommendations for all schools and setting up mechanisms for resolving disputes.

Havner, one of eight members of the task force who discussed the presidents' proposals during a meeting of the LEPC, said the areas of dispute are master planning, unified budget, student information system, affiliation-mergers and dispute resolution.

He said he was optimistic that something could be achieved to improve coordination among the state's 26 institutions of higher education.

"This is a work in progress," Havner said. "I've seen a lot more awareness, a lot more willingness to talk about cooperation."

Most U.S. schools are safe, government says

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Ninety percent of schools report no serious violent crimes such as robbery and weapon attacks despite the deadly string of shootings that led many to tighten security, the government said Wednesday before a White House conference on school safety.

But in releasing a report on school safety, Education Secretary Richard Riley said even one incident of crime in school is too many.

The definition of serious violent crimes includes attacks with a weapon, rapes, robbery, murder and suicide. School crime is down overall.

The report and today's conference are in response to the six multiple homicides at public schools last year that left 16 people dead. But at the same time, the Clinton administration must show it is doing something about the violence. It is being careful to not rattle confidence in public schools.

The administration is portraying itself as a champion of public schools against Republican efforts to make it easier for parents to send children to private and parochial schools.

"This comprehensive report proves that the vast majority of America's schools are still among the safest places for youngsters to be," Riley said.

The report made the following claims:

■Forty-three percent of schools reported no crime in the school year 1996-1997, while 90 percent reported no serious violent crime. Four people were killed in two multiple-victim homicides at schools in 1992-1993, compared to the six incidents claiming 16 lives in the last school year.

■Fewer students brought weapons of all kinds to school, based on 1993 surveys of students in grades 9-12. The overall crime rate at schools also dropped between 1993 and 1996, based on surveys of students ages 12-19.

■Students reporting gangs at their schools increased from 15 to 28 percent between 1989 and 1995.

Much of the data had been reported earlier this year.

Despite last year's shootings involving mainly rural or suburban students, urban students had the highest risk of violent death at school.

Mistrial declared after bag, water pitcher fly

HILL CITY, Kan. — Impending stress prompted Nina Desaire to throw her purse and a water pitcher at Don Hoffman, resulting in a mistrial and a finding of contempt.

"It was a pretty exciting day in Graham County," said Hoffman, an attorney from Hays, who was defending his client, Tim Walts, in a civil lawsuit Monday.

Hoffman's first indication things were going wrong was when he felt something hit his back. Then the plastic pitcher hit his chair. Next came the water and the shouting.

"I had just asked a question on cross examination when I was hit in the back by the plaintiff's purse," Hoffman said. "I didn't know what had happened. It was no more than a tap.

"Then all of a sudden, there was water all over, and the water pitcher flew up toward the jury box," he said. "I looked at my client, and he had water all over his face."

The case pitted Gerald and Nina Desaire of Damar, against Hoffman's client, an aerial crop sprayer from Hill City.

The Desaires claimed chemical drift from Walts' airplane ruined their garden and 200 fruit trees. They were seeking $60,000 in damages.

According to courtroom witnesses, Hoffman, seated at the defense table, asked a witness whether the Desaires could have ruined their own garden and trees. The question apparently made the couple so angry that Nina Desaire launched her purse and then the water pitcher at the defense table.

Speaker tells story of life at Auschwitz

Jill Jarsulic/Kansas State Collegian

Benjamin Jacobs spoke Wednesday night in Union Forum Hall on his experience in Auschwitz during the Holocaust. Jacobs said his goal is to educate the public so that something as horrible as the Holocaust doesn't happen again.

By Desiree Lamberson
Kansas State Collegian

Benjamin Jacobs was in his second year of dentistry school when he was forced to endure the greatest tragedy of the 20th century — the Holocaust.

Jacobs was one of the survivors who has gone on to tell his story, which he shared Wednesday night in presenting his speech, "The Dentist of Auschwitz: a survivor's story of the Holocaust."

When World War II broke out in 1939, Adolf Hitler's first action was to annex many nations, including Jacobs' homeland which was claimed by both Germany and Poland. From there, Hitler slowly began to build his empire and gain power.

"The first move he made was to prepare himself by building weapons for anyone who stood in his way," Jacobs said. "Then Hitler moved on, he demanded it, and he took it, and the world did nothing."

Jacobs said that although the United States and 50 other nations had conferences on what to do about Hitler's advances, nothing came out of them.

"No one in the State Department of the U.S. would speak and deal with the question of what to do to save the Jews. No one believed this, and this is the true tragedy of the story."

Jacobs said the Allies allowed Hitler to advance by not taking action.

"That tipped the scale for Hitler to know that he could do whatever he wanted, and he was right, for what followed was much, much worse," he said.

Soon after Hitler annexed his homeland, Jacobs and his family were forced to leave their home and move into a ghetto. They could only take with them what they could carry in two hands.

Jacobs and the other Jews then were forced to do demeaning tasks ordered by the guards.

"The prettier a girl was, the more degrading it was of what she was asked to do," he said.

In 1941, Jacobs chose to accompany his father to a labor camp, leaving his older brother to take care of the rest of the family.

"I was hoping that if they needed our work, they would let us live," he said.

As he left for the camp, Jacobs' mother urged him to take his dentistry instruments with him.

"Those few instruments were responsible for my life," he said.

In 1943, Jacobs and his father were shipped to Auschwitz, a concentration camp notorious for the genocide of many Jews. There he met Josef Mengele and Adolf Eichmann.

"Josef Mengele was an aristocratic killer," he said. "He was cold, he was unbelievably soaked with the will to kill."

While at Auschwitz, Jacobs was assigned to the dentist's station where he was given the task of extracting teeth. Jacobs worked on many guards, who in return would conveniently "forget" a bag of food.

"They wouldn't give it to me, but they would 'forget' it," he said.

With the extra food, Jacobs could help support other prisoners.

"Some of them survived, but most of them did not survive," he said. "Jews were killed anywhere, any way — machine guns, gassed, killed. They even built special vehicles where the exhaust was piped in. Their ashes were strewn across the woods of Poland."

After the Allies' defeat of the Nazis, Jacobs went on to tell his story in his book, "The Dentist of Auschwitz."

"I want to tell my survivor story," he said. "I want you to think about it and think about what mankind can do to another."

Teto Henderson, manager of programs for Union Program Council, said the committee chose Jacobs to speak because of the information he had to share.

"A lot of people don't know that [the Holocaust] existed or haven't heard that much about it in history classes or high school," Henderson said.

Jacobs said he chose to talk about his story so that he could help educate people and prevent another Holocaust from happening.

"Be vocal, be prepared, accept, tolerate and let everyone live the way he would want to. Let anyone of any kind do what he must. The first amendment doesn't have an exclusion for anyone," Jacobs said.

World-famous Kansan receives award from state arts commission

■ K-State owns 128 photographs of artist's work, but collection unable to be displayed.

By Russell Fortmeyer
Kansas State Collegian

The work of world-renowned photographer, filmmaker, writer and native Kansan Gordon Parks has enjoyed a revival this year.

A retrospective of his work opened in Washington, D.C., and will come to Kansas in 1999. Additionally, he was in Kansas on Tuesday to accept the first Distinguished Arts Award from the Kansas Arts Commission.

K-State was one of the first institutions to recognize the importance of Parks' work, and the artist gave 128 photographs to the university in 1973. K-State has not been able to participate in the renewed interest in Parks' work, however, because of the poor quality of the collection.

Bill North, curator of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, said he hoped the photographs could be conserved and exhibited at the museum in the future.

PARKS

"In their present state, they will eventually self-destruct," North said.

The photographs are dry-mounted on masonite — a fiberboard — which is not archivally stable. If the photographs are left alone, the adhesive will burn through and ruin them. Furthermore, in 1975 faculty in the Department of Art damaged a few photographs on their way to an exhibition in New York City.

The collection includes a selection of some of the artist's most well-known photographs taken while working as a staff photojournalist at Life magazine from 1948-68. It includes celebrities, fashion and African-American life in Fort Scott, Kan.

It has not been exhibited in the Beach art museum since it opened in 1996.

Parks and K-State go back more than 30 years. He received an honorary doctorate of letters from K-State in 1970. In 1973, in conjunction with the Gordon Parks Festival at K-State, he gave the university his photographs, along with papers and music compositions.

Sixteen works from the K-State collection are included in a small temporary exhibition of Parks' work now at Washburn University in Topeka.

The retrospective "Half Past Autumn" opened in 1997 at the Corcoran Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C. It will open at the Edwin A. Ulrich Museum of Art at Wichita State University in May 1999.

Recently, director John Singleton announced plans to remake Parks' classic 1971 blaxploitation film, "Shaft."

Born in 1912 and raised in Fort Scott, Parks now lives in New York City. He wrote the autobiographical novel "The Learning Tree" in 1965 and made it into a movie in 1969. His other films are "The Super Cops," "Shaft's Big Score," and "Leadbelly." His autobiography, "Voices in the Mirror," was published in 1990.

Gov. Bill Graves presented the arts award to Parks at Washburn University, making this the second time a Kansas governor has honored the artist.

Parks accepted a lifetime achievement in the arts award from Gov. John Carlin in 1986. The Distinguished Arts Award was created by the commission last year in order to honor Kansas artists who have found success outside of Kansas.

Registering to vote couldn't be easier

We've got a job for you today.

Your mission must be completed by Monday.

Go register to vote. It's fast and easy to do, but it means so much.

Everyone likes to complain about government and policy, but only those who actively make an effort to change those policies have a right to complain.

It's time to take responsibility.

Think back to your high school American government class. The democracy we live in is based on the idea of the voice of the people. Your vote says which legislators you want, who (hopefully) will vote in accordance with their constituents' wishes. In addition to electing government officials, many times registered voters vote directly for or against an issue.

The first step in the process is registering to vote.

Today a booth is set up in the K-State Student Union where students can register to vote for this year's elections. The Office of Student Activities and Services and Student Governing Association are making it convenient for students to register, so there's really no reason not to. Take your driver's license and something to prove your local residency.

Some of you might be saying, "Hey, I'm already registered in my home county."

But we'd like to suggest something. Think about registering in Riley County. For many of you, it will be your home for the next four years.

Besides, if you register now, you won't have to do it again until you leave Manhattan.

The representatives and issues facing area residents in the election will be issues facing you.

These representatives will decide issues of higher education funding and, eventually, issues affecting faculty salaries. If those issues seem a little out of your realm of comprehension, here's another.

In the governor's race, a big issue is eliminating sales tax on food. Think about the last time you stood in the checkout line. Sales tax might not seem like much on one item, but on a $100 food bill, it's a nice chunk of change.

These issues affect you. You'll probably end up complaining about something eventually. Don't be apathetic now. Get registered, and then your next mission, and you should choose to accept it, is Nov. 3.

SERVICE WITH A SMILE

Workers in service industry leave columnist baffled by constant cheer, helpfulness

VIEWPOINT

KEN WELLS

When I used to commute to work, I'd stop by my favorite convenience store and pick up 44 ounces of a carbonated, caffeinated drink to keep me awake through work. The clerk was one of the most perpetually cheerful people I'd ever met. Despite my misery and general apathy, this person managed to radiate an emotion of happiness and optimism that even the most evil, dark-hearted scoundrel (that would be me) couldn't completely escape. And this is a person in whose presence I spent two, three minutes tops.

Last February I wrote a column about serving the public, based on one month of careful study. My final response was surprise at how someone, anyone could interact with the public for more than a few moments without utter frustration and hysteria. After almost two years, I've rethought that stance.

How in the hell do you people do it?

I thought maybe it was Manhattan, specifically, and I'm convinced the city helps. There's the small-town atmosphere with a Staples. You can drive through town without seeing anyone familiar, but there's still an aura of intimacy. My bank teller noticed my thumb was bleeding a little (stupid car door), and she offered me a bandage. That's better than free checking right there.

The 44-ounce smile and financial first aid aren't the exceptions. While shuttling through a drive-through a few weeks ago, I was informed promptly that the cost would be "$4.12, and a smile." Perhaps my confusion showed in my twisted face. The cashier explained that nobody going through the drive-through was smiling, so she began charging smiles. It was imaginative and somewhat perverse, and it made me genuinely think of smiling. As a matter of fact, of everything that happened to me that day, that's the one incident that I can't shake from my mind.

There's also the legendary good humor of the librarians, able to take a badly stated joke with style and grace while keeping Hale Library running smoothly (and for the record, I didn't mean to imply that they were bloodsucking squirrels, just that they might employ bloodsucking squirrels as grisly furry enforcers of library policy, so please give me back my stuffed cow. I miss Sally).

Even K-State's finest (not the football team, the campus police) are prone to instances of humanity.

During finals, a classmate of mine was napping on the benches in the atrium of Nichols Hall. I was watching over a third-floor railing, insuring she didn't get attacked or try to sleep through the rest of her educational career. A K-State police officer leaves the elevator, walks by several feet away from me, greets me, I reply with same, and the officer stops for a moment. "Are you OK?" the officer asks.

Mind you, up to that point, I hadn't realized I was wearing a black coat, looking quite tired and probably appeared to be a jumper in the making, so perhaps it was only the logical thing to ask. Maybe it fit the work policy in that by stopping a grad student from making a mess in the atrium, they'd have less to clean up later. Still, it was pretty memorable.

This is what we often don't realize while on the job. You and I often get sick of this demeanor of civility we're forced to endure while we're punched in. I'm not saying all the smiles and good words are masks; there's a lot of sincerity in the eyes of the people I see behind counters or wearing name tags, people who genuinely care about the people they work for and with. But eventually that bad day comes crashing down on us, and there's nothing we'd like more than to channel Randall from "Clerks" and spit on the customers and rain down righteous fury upon them. That's when it gets tough, when you have to swallow the anger and the pride and, if just for a few moments, try to give them a piece of the happiness you can't quite tap into.

There are too many people who keep that smile up too long, people momentarily divorced from their own enthusiasm and serenity, people who think every ounce of energy that goes into maintaining that facade is purely wasted.

It's not.

If you can deal with customers and people like me through your shift and make it through with a smile (if weary) and a laugh (if tired), then there's hope for all of us.

To the people who brought me even the smallest glimmer of such, both the aforementioned and those unspoken past, present and future, thank you.

Fraternities, sororities treated unfairly by media coverage

Editor,

On Wednesday, Oct. 7, I returned a call to one of your writers who wanted a response from my office on the recent dropping of criminal charges against the Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity after an alleged hazing incident last spring.

My response was that the incident was regrettable and unfortunate, especially because greek organizations everywhere are tainted by reports of destructive activities. This incident notwithstanding, the K-State National Pan-Hellenic Council fraternities and sororities chartered on this campus have a mission of public service.

During the past few months, much attention has been focused on this alleged hazing situation, and little, if any, has been focused on the positive and productive activities that our greek organizations participate in and sponsor. In the aforementioned article, the only reference made to these more positive activities was a statement made by a K-State fraternity member. Yes, this type of situation harms all greek organizations, but in my opinion, the media, and, consequently, the Collegian, exacerbate the situation.

Thirty days ago, on my first day of employment here at K-State, an Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority member handed me a small package. This package contained information and a pledge card for their upcoming walk-a-thon for the American Diabetes Association and an announcement of their donations drive for the Manhattan Crisis Center.

Last Monday, I was handed another package from the sorority, containing information about Breast Cancer Awareness Month and a pink ribbon to wear in commemoration of this activity. Last Friday, my very excited 11-year-old daughter got off her bus waving a flier from the Delta Sigma Theta sorority, inviting her to a free movie night at the Boys & Girls Club of Manhattan.

When editors make the choice to print a less-than-balanced view of any person, place, or organization, we all are damaged. After researching past issues of the Collegian, I believe it presents a biased and one-sided view of our greek organizations when only negative activities about greek life are carried on the front page.

Yes, you are mandated to print the truth, but shouldn't it be the whole truth?

Confusion about Christianity needs to be cleared up

VIEWPOINT

SAM SACKETT

Some confusion has arisen on campus within the past month as to what a Christian is. If you want to gain an understanding of the Christian faith, you have to start with the man known as Jesus.

The core of the Christian faith is that God's son, Jesus, came to Earth and was crucified for the sins of the world. He then rose from the dead three days later. He ascended into heaven where he came from. Through this, he offers eternal life to all who believe in him.

There is a movement among some who say Jesus was simply a great moral teacher, on the level with Gandhi, Mohammed, Buddha or Confucius. To believe that Jesus was a great moral teacher is true. If you stop there, you are making an incredibly foolish claim, for Jesus claimed he was God's son. He taught that the only way to be saved from sin was to have faith in him.

He taught that no one could have eternal life except by believing in him, and he was the only way to heaven.

C.S. Lewis said, "A man who is merely a man and said the sort of things Jesus said would not be a great moral teacher, he would either be a lunatic, on the level with a man who says he is a poached egg, or else he would be the devil of Hell."

Back to the moral teacher aspect. The teachings of moral teachers are just that — teachings. Jesus taught that his purpose on Earth was to offer freedom from sin and reconciliation to God. He did more than offer us a way to live, he offered us eternal life. Jesus did not leave us the option of calling him a great moral teacher. He said he was the son of God.

Jesus is either who he says he is, or else he is not.

It is difficult for people simply to accept what Jesus said without adding to it. Much of the preaching you hear, or hear about, that speaks of do's and do not's for the Christian faith has nothing to do with salvation. Rather, these messages have to do with moral behavior and how the church defines what is acceptable in God's sight. While much of what is taught is good and moral, if we try to live what is being taught from the pulpit, we miss the whole of Christianity.

The essence of Christianity is to accept Jesus as God's son and to believe in him for eternal salvation. When you believe in Jesus, you believe in what he said. If you believe in what he said, you follow him. This following after Jesus leads to the doing of good and moral things — many of the things taught from the pulpit. If a person tries just to be a good person and live a moral life, that person has missed the mark.

Imagine throwing a football and then saying you are a Wildcat football player. Yes, football players do throw footballs. However, you first have to become a K-State football player before you call yourself one. Then you will throw the ball and rightfully can call yourself a Wildcat football player.

Who you are is more important than what you do. If you are authentic, you will do what you say you are. Becoming a follower of Jesus is all that matters. The good works will follow if the heart is sincere.

Christians do try to live moral lives. In this pursuit, they often set up boundaries and safeguards for themselves. Many times these boundaries are what others view as Christianity, but they have little to do with following Jesus. Rather, these rules are individual disciplines.

Christianity is based on following Jesus and obeying what he taught. He said that unless we give up everything we hold to be important, we cannot be his followers. He said that unless our priority was to follow him, we could not be his disciples.

He said the cost of following him was everything — including our very selves.

Refugees remain reluctant to return as NATO continues to prepare strike

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia — NATO warned Wednesday that Slobodan Milosevic isn't doing what he must to avoid airstrikes and ethnic Albanian refugees remained reluctant to return to their charred homes as skepticism replaced relief over the Kosovo agreement.

Even as the U.N. refugee agency resumed aid convoys to Kosovo, questions remained over whether the Yugoslav president would meet international demands and refrain from further hostilities toward ethnic Albanians.

Demonstrating that it's not taking him at his word, NATO positioned warplanes at bases in Italy for possible air attacks on Serbia.

"NATO airstrikes have not yet been averted by Milosevic," said an official at the alliance's headquarters in Brussels, Belgium, speaking on condition of anonymity.

"We'll be keeping up the military pressure for some time to come."

Milosevic reluctantly agreed Monday to the demands of world leaders determined to halt his seven-month offensive against ethnic Albanian separatists in Kosovo and avert a tragedy among tens of thousands of refugees living outdoors as winter approaches.

The 16 NATO members have given Milosevic until Saturday to fully comply or face the renewed threat of airstrikes.

But even before an agreed-to 2,000-member unarmed monitoring force is assembled, it is clear Milosevic has not met at least one key demand: withdrawing his forces to levels before the crackdown on the southern Serb province began Feb. 28.

Teammates reap benefits of Howard's strong '97 season

HOWARD

■ Double-teaming Howard helps Clements tie record.

BY JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The world can be a hard place when you're a marked man. No one on the K-State football team knows this better than junior defensive end Darren Howard.

One of the top defensive linemen in the Big 12 Conference a year ago, Howard has been hard-pressed to repeat his performance this season, mostly because of offensive double-teams and his switch to inside defensive end.

Howard's impressive sophomore season included 11 quarterback sacks, which ranked third in the Big 12 and 11th nationally, and three fumble recoveries, which tied for the conference lead.

Although his nose for football has guided him to two fumble recoveries this year, Howard's sack total has declined. Throughout five games, Howard has only two.

Even with the decline in sacks, head coach Bill Snyder said Howard's play has allowed others to make the big plays.

"I can't measure his play only by what the statistics say," Snyder said. "Some of the sacks that others are being credited with are created by Darren."

After a solid campaign last season, Howard said the extra attention he has been given can be frustrating.

"I've seen more double-teams than last season," he said. "Since that's the case, I've just got to go out and fight it."

Howard's 13 tackles this season are off pace from his numbers in 1997, when he recorded 58 tackles. Although unhappy with his current number, Howard said it wouldn't be a source of irritation on the field.

"I know I should have better stats, but it's not going to frustrate me," he said. "It's just not happening for me right now. I've just got to figure it out, and then the stats will come around."

Howard can take comfort in the fact that K-State continues to lead the NCAA in defense, and while his numbers are down from a season ago, his play has helped others to step up.

A case in point occurred last weekend at Colorado. While Howard was busy tangled up with two offensive linemen on the right side, Joe Bob Clements continually was gaining advantage on the left. Partly because of this, Clements recorded three sacks, tying a school record.

When asked about his overlooked contribution to Clements' performance, Howard said he was happy to see a teammate succeed.

"I was happy for him," Howard said. "It was exciting. He had more (sacks) in that game than he did all season last year. We all had a laugh about that."

Although Howard's numbers haven't been as headline-worthy as last season, his solid play, inside or out, has helped solidify the nation's top defense and guide the team to a No. 3 ranking in the USA Today Coaches Poll, its highest ranking ever.

Because of the Cats' prosperous season, Howard said he's willing to sacrifice personal glory for the team's overall success.

"I know it's best for the team, and whatever they call is going to work," he said.

Golf team struggles in tournament

■ Senior Mitzi Taylor leads squad by placing 46th; senior Jane Yi places 59th.

BY JOSHUA KINDER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After two encouraging tournaments to start the season, the women's golf team has struggled of late.

After participating in the Big 12 Preview earlier this month, the women followed up by finishing last week in the Big 10/Big 12 Shoot-out in Franklin, Ind., shooting 315-325-331 for a total of 971.

"We set a goal for scoring average to start the season," head coach Kristi Knight said.

"I'm concerned that we lost ground between the first and second rounds this week. The third round was a whole new course with the poor wind conditions that came up."

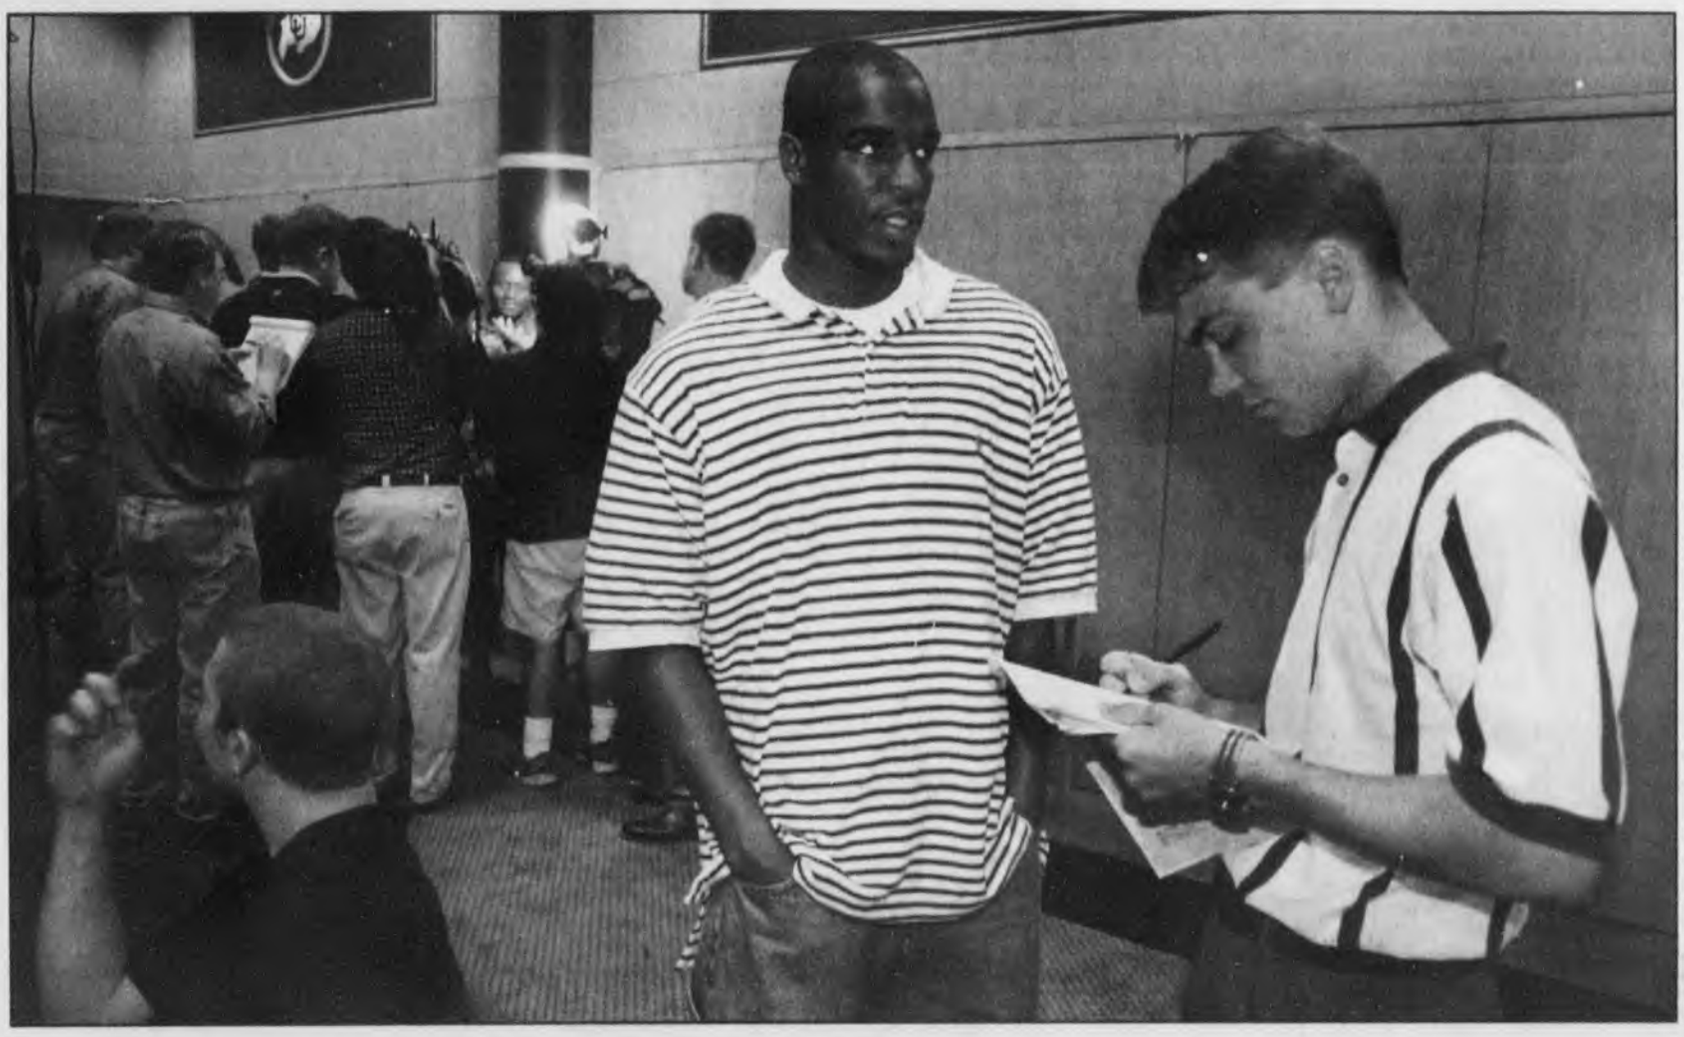
The women were led by senior Mitzi Taylor, who fired a 72-79-85-236 for a tie for 46th place.

Senior Jane Yi tied for 59th with 79-83-80-242.

"It takes more than one player to do well in a tournament," Knight said. "Other players shot good 9s. We need to put two 9s together to get a good score."

The competition in the shoot-out was the toughest the Cats have faced this season, but Knight said she felt there were three or four teams they could have beaten in the field.

"I don't want the team to get down on themselves," she said. "It was the strongest field this season. There were three or four teams that we feel we should have beat, though.



"We're going to go back and look over the stats and our preparation, but I'm not going to push the panic button yet," Knight said.

She said she wanted the tournament to be an experience that would motivate the team for the rest of the season.

"We want to get things turned around to finish the fall season," Knight said. "There is no way to paint a pretty picture about this tournament. We'd like to stack up better against these teams, but this was a learning experience for us.

"It's no fun to finish last," she said. "You have to learn from it and let it motivate you to get better. It motivates me to coach better. I've got some ideas for what we can do to improve."

The women finish up in Las Cruces, N.M., Oct. 29-Nov. 1 in the Roadrunner/Diet Coke Invitational.

THE MAN WITH THE MIKE

DB92 sports director inspired by Holthus

STORY BY NATE JENKINS

It was a small epiphany, a rare moment when the stars seemed aligned above the Washburn University campus and the future was just as clear for Brian Smoller, the sports director for K-State's student-run radio station, KSDB-FM 91.9.

It hit him like the passes from Michael Bishop to Darnell McDonald, routes that Smoller now describes on radio broadcasts as an announcer for DB92 — quick, sharp and there before you know it.

He said he knew he had to get involved with sports radio.

"I was at Washburn on a music scholarship, of all things, after graduating from Shawnee Heights High School in Topeka," Smoller said. "I was spending too much time watching baseball and other sports, and it just hit me one day. I said to myself, 'I can do this.'"

Smoller, who said he was inspired by former Wildcat football announcer Mitch Holthus and is acquainted with him because they attended the same church in Topeka, dropped his general education major at Washburn and plotted another course, one that would involve radio.

He said not being on the air didn't deter him from preparing for the moment he would be.

"I started to dedicate myself to it," Smoller said. "I listened to radio broadcasts more and practiced it a lot."

Smoller said he was anxious to transfer to K-State from Washburn, and in 1997, he worked his first game as a broadcaster for Wildcat football.

It was all the more exciting, Smoller said, because it was also the first year for DB92 to broadcast K-State football games.

While the football team's success has attracted national attention and helped tune thousands into the airwaves, Smoller said that when it comes to pigskin and Saturday afternoons, the Wildcat Network, WIBW-AM 580, has the market cornered.

He said it doesn't bother him, in part because of the success DB92's postgame call-in show "Wildcat Blitz," with K-State student hosts Rich Smith and Mike Vietti, has enjoyed.

"Those guys do a great job — that show is larger than we ever imagined," Smoller said.

Smoller said he is especially proud of how the sports department at DB92 has branched out during the last two years and accepted the challenge of covering more sports.

One of them is volleyball, which, like football, is having its games broadcast for the second year.

"We get a lot of listeners for volleyball, because we're the only ones to broadcast the games, and it's really starting to catch on with the success they've had," Smoller said.

"I think we're helping spread the word about the team, and now their game attendance is one of the highest in the Big 12," he said.

Smoller also said the station will broadcast some K-State baseball games this year, a team Smoller said deserves more attention.

In addition to working toward graduating this spring with a degree in mass communications, Smoller also is the assistant sports director at KMAN-AM 1350, which he said takes up about 30 hours a week.

Smoller said he's thankful for the chance he got at DB92 and said his approach to his job reflects that.

"One of the main goals here is to learn," Smoller said. "We'll give anybody here a chance, regardless if they have experience as long as they know their stuff, and they'll have the chance to progress."

If you don't know that Lockett won't win Thorpe Award, you can't defeat this columnist

SAM FELSENFELD

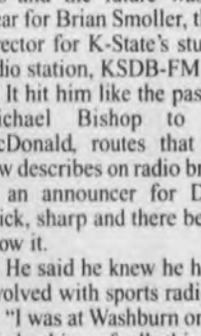
Soapbox of the week: IF YOU'RE TURNING YOUR NEBRASKA TICKET INTO CASH, DON'T SELL OUT YOUR SCHOOL — MAKE SURE IT'S GOING TO A K-STATER. Now, down off my soapbox and on with my column.

Three weeks ago, I was beaten by a woman. Sun Dee Mills picked more football games correctly against the spread than I did, and I've felt like a boob ever since.

This week, I'm going to get revenge against Kimberly Peschka. She might as well cancel Christmas, because I'm gonna beat her by four games this week. I'm gonna whoop her. ... I ... could ... go ... all ... the ... way. I'm ready to rumble. I'm ready to roll. I'm going crazy.

I'm doing this for men everywhere.

But until then, I'm still recovering from my beating. I feel ashamed every time I look in the mirror. That's why I enlisted Peschka as my guest picker.



As part of the first order of business, I quizzed her on football. I needed to make sure I'm not picking on someone my own size.

The top five teams in the nation?

She lists, in order: Ohio State, UCLA, Tennessee, K-State, then Nebraska. Four out of five gets you a B in the classroom. Not too bad.

The leading Heisman candidates?

According to Peschka, keep your eye on Michael Bishop, Donovan McNabb, Jim Couch (yes, "Jim"), Ricky Williams and "whoever that quarterback at Central Florida University is." Not perfect, but not bad. Don't tell Cade McNown, though. I take that back — tell him — to (a dark, warm place) with Cade McNown and UCLA.

GUEST PICKER KIMBERLY PESCHKA

Doak Walker candidates?

She listed only one nominee for the best running back in the nation. Ricky Williams. Good call. Peschka even knew he switched his jersey to No. 37 in honor of the recently deceased Walker.

I was getting a little worried that Peschka might know her stuff. I can't handle two defeats to women, but then I asked her who could go home with the Jim Thorpe Award, which is given to the top defensive back in the nation.

"All I can think of is Aaron Lockett," she said. Thank goodness. I don't mean any disrespect toward Lockett — he's probably the most pleasant of the Cats to interview, and it sure is fun watching him beat his man play after play. But as a wide receiver, he probably isn't going to take home the Thorpe Award this year.

Good deal. I've got myself a mismatch. I feel like a bully, but I might not be bowl-eligible at the end of the season, if I don't beat her.

I'm posting the early line between us at -3 games. I, of course, am favored. I only need a straight-up victory to even the score against women.

Call it a weak moral victory, but I'll take it.

"If you lose to me, that'll make you look like a (expletive) idiot," Peschka said, laughing. Too late. Mills did that to me three weeks ago.

Just for information's sake, Peschka knew the direction I was going to take with this column, so I must thank her for being a good sport. But I'm still going to beat her.

Anyway, I beat my guest picker last week. I'm now 4-2. I'm 37-25 picking games, while my guests are 31-31. Strap on your safety belts — here are the games Peschka and I are picking this week.

1. Oklahoma State +21 at K-State. In reality, I think it's somewhat dangerous to expect the Cats to win by three touchdowns. But in 58 days, K-State will be my alma mater. If you've read my column before, you know I'll never pick against the Cats. My pick: K-State to cover. Guest pick: K-State to cover.

2. Virginia -2 at Georgia Tech. The fewer unbeaten teams there are, the better off the Cats are. My pick: Georgia Tech to cover. Guest pick: Virginia to cover.

3. Kansas +35 at Nebraska. One day, if I have a child, I will tell her or him this bedtime story: Once upon a time, the big red monster took that stupid little bird, ripped its still-beating heart out of its chest, chewed it up and spit it out, back onto the stupid little bird. The end. She or he will sleep well. My pick: Nebraska to cover. Guest pick: Nebraska to cover.

4. Oklahoma +16 at Missouri. OU joke of the week: What did the Oklahoma football player get on the ACT? Drool. Too easy. Send me your OU joke nominations for next week. My pick: Missouri to cover. Guest pick: Missouri to cover.

5. Wisconsin -20.5 at Illinois. Illinois is the KU of the Big 10: "Wait until basketball," their fans say. My pick: Wisconsin to cover. Guest pick: Wisconsin to cover.

6. Auburn +20.5 at Florida. Florida just doesn't seem to be able to blow anybody out this year other than Northeast Louisiana. My pick: Auburn to cover. Guest pick: Florida to cover.

7. Arizona -8.5 at Oregon State. My pick: Arizona to cover. Guest pick: Oregon State to cover.

8. Michigan -14.5 at Northwestern. This would have been a good game three years ago. Right now, it's as attractive as a hairy, three-eyed monster. My pick: Michigan to cover. Guest pick: Michigan to cover.

9. Texas A&M -6.5 at Baylor. The Aggies beat Nebraska by seven, but I have this feeling they'll lose to the Bears and make me look like an idiot. My pick: Texas A&M to cover. Guest pick: Baylor to cover.

10. Kentucky +9.5 at LSU. The only numbers Tim Couch doesn't rack up are victories. My pick: LSU to cover. Guest pick: Kentucky to cover.

11. Oregon +10.5 at UCLA. This game will have more scoring than the movie "A Night with Wilt Chamberlain." Let's all pray that more points are produced by the Ducks. My pick: Oregon to cover. Guest pick: UCLA to cover.

That's all for this week. If you think we're wrong, if you need a friend, if you want to know where to mail me cash gifts or if you want to know the meaning of life, drop me an e-mail.

HAPPINESS TODAY

BRAD GOOD AND TYLER LANSDOWN

TASTE OF AFRICA

High-energy dance company focuses on traditional West African culture

BY CORBIN H. CRABLE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A piece of West Africa will come to McCain Auditorium Thursday night.

Le Ballet National Du Senegal, a dance company that performs traditional dances, songs and music from various West African tribes, will perform their touring show, "Pangols," at 7:30 p.m. Thursday.

The company last performed at McCain on Feb. 23, 1995, during its most recent North American tour. David Frain, assistant director of McCain, said the demand for the group was the deciding factor in booking it and Richard Martin, director of McCain, did so as soon as the opportunity presented itself.

"The people who had seen it before said if they had the opportunity to see it again, they would," he said. "So when the opportunity arose, Richard (Martin) took it."

"Pangols," a word derived from a West African tribal language, is a reference to the spiritual nature of all beings and things. The themes in the fast-paced dance, song and music mostly tell stories about religion and the different types of West African tribes.

Critics have praised Le Ballet National Du Senegal as a group whose upbeat music has the ability to make audiences feel happy. Frain said he agreed with this statement but said the music presents much more.

"It shows different tribal traditions in beautiful adaptations," he said. "To see it onstage is an art form."

While the performers of Le Ballet National Du Senegal are known to induce feelings of joy and happiness in the audiences they encounter, their shows are known to be fast-paced and full of energy. Frain said he expects audiences to be physically worn out by the performance.

"It's such a high energy show. By the time it's all said and done, you're out of breath, just like they are.

"With this show, you're amazed and drained at the same time."

Frain also said one of the show's main intentions is to educate audiences about the cultures and tribes of West Africa.

"This is a good opportunity to see people from Senegal and to see their art and religion," he said.

CONCERT INFO: Le Ballet National du Senegal will perform at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in McCain Auditorium. For more information, contact the McCain Auditorium box office at 532-6428.

Catwalk '98 to spotlight hair, fashion

BY AMY MILLER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students ready for a new look will want to attend Catwalk '98 on Thursday.

Put on by Hair Experts Design Team, the event will be at 7 p.m. in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

"Our goal is to inform people and let them know what's new as far as hair and fashion," Mary Fischer, education director for Hair Experts, said. "But mainly, a lot of clients don't know what looks good and why."

She said stylists at the show will teach people about matching hairstyles with their face shapes.

Segments titled "campus wear," "date night" and "special occasion" will highlight hairstyles as well as fashion and makeup, she said.

"It's about putting the whole thing together — hair, makeup, jewelry and clothes."

Most of the show's 17 models will have their hair done beforehand, but two of them will be transformed from a casual hairstyle to a formal look onstage, she said. The women who will be made up ahead of time will have "before" photographs taken, which will be shown at Catwalk '98 as they are modeling.

A committee of six event organizers conducted model searches in the residence halls, Fischer said.

Abigail Childress, freshman in interior design, said she became a long-hair model for the special occasion segment by chance — she was asked to be in the show when she was at the salon with a friend.

"She kind of fell into it," Fischer said.

Fischer said the models helped decide what kind of hairstyles they would wear, and the work was done for free. She gave Childress a foil weave, which is a highlighting technique.

"She would have paid about $120 for it," Fischer said.

Fashions will be coordinated by staff from The Limited, The Buckle For Guys & Gals and Maurices, Fischer said. Attendants can win gift certificates from the three stores, as well as other door prizes, including free haircuts for a year. The first 150 people to attend will receive a free gift, and admission is free, she said.

CATWALK INFO: Catwalk '98 will be at 7 p.m. Thursday in the K-State Union Ballroom; admission is free.

'U.S. Marshals' lacks insight, plot development

BY RYAN DOOM
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

U.S. Marshal Sam Gerard is back tracking down fugitives and giving stone-cold stares in the sequel to "The Fugitive." Tommy Lee Jones reprises the role that earned him an Oscar as Gerard in the video release of "U.S. Marshals."

In this adventure, Gerard is out to find Sheridan (Wesley Snipes), who is accused of murdering two federal agents in New York. Sheridan is to be shipped back to New York to go to trial. On the ride to New York after Sheridan's capture, the plane crashes. All of the prisoners are accounted for except for one, Sheridan.

Gerard takes it upon himself to lead the man hunt, but the state decides to put one of its own on the case, Agent Royce (Robert Downey Jr.). Sheridan alludes all of them and makes his way back to New York, where the chase begins.

Director Stuart Baird tries to capture the excitement and adventure of the original film, but he seems to come up short. He must have realized that making a sequel would be hard without its main star, Harrison Ford, so he decided the movie would have to be more action-packed than the first. The picture's action sequences were good, and the plane crash was spectacular but not as well done as the bus incident in "The Fugitive."

What the film really is missing are insights into the mind of the escaped convict. The original was good because it allowed the audience to know what Ford had to do in order to survive and clear his name.

The plot of the film could have been intriguing, but the director focused more on action and one-liners than he did on developing a story. "U.S. Marshals" could have been a thrilling sequel, but it wasn't able to make up for the loss of Ford.

Commencement sees changes

■ Increased participation changes ceremony plans.

BY GABE ECKERT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some December graduates will notice a change in venue when they cross the stage at the end of the semester.

This year, the College of Agriculture will have its December commencement ceremony in McCain Auditorium instead of Bramlage Coliseum. Also, the College of Technology, which previously had its ceremony with the College of Engineering, will have a separate ceremony in Salina, Kan.

Beth Unger, commencement committee chair, said there are two primary reasons for this year's changes.

"Basically, students are much more interested in attending commencement ceremonies, and families are attending in greater numbers," she said.

More than 1,300 students will graduate this December. Unger said she expected more than 70 percent of the graduates to participate in commencement ceremonies. In the past, as few as 50 percent of graduates participated, she said.

In addition, most graduates bring family and friends to the ceremony. Last December, the average graduate brought nine guests, Unger said.

She said the design of K-State's commencement ceremonies is the reason for the high percentage of graduate participation and the large number of guests.

"K-State has taken a very personalized approach to commencement," Unger said. "It's a very family-oriented event."

Kevin Stamm, senior in biological and agricultural engineering, said he planned to have his family and friends attend his commencement ceremony in December.

"Graduation is a major event in my life," he said. "It will be great to be able to share the accomplishment with my family and friends."

Unger said another factor that makes K-State's commencement ceremonies successful is focusing on the individual. All graduates have their pictures taken and their names individually called when they receive their diplomas.

"It's the graduate who is the focus of the ceremony," she said. "That's the real focus of what goes on."

K-State-Salina to have own, small ceremony

BY JENNIFER WHITE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 30 fall graduates of the College of Technology at K-State-Salina won't have to choose where they walk for graduation. An increase in enrollment prompted the college to hold a fall graduation ceremony in Salina, Kan., this year.

"In the past, we would give them the chance to walk in Manhattan with the engineering department, or they would have to wait until spring commencement, which is held here," said Robert Homolka, associate dean of the college.

The ceremony will be Dec. 10 in the College Center conference room, and K-State-Salina dean Dennis Kuhlman will be the commencement speaker. There will be a reception for students and their guests afterwards.

"We will be able to give more recognition to our students with the smaller audience," Homolka said.

The audience will be filled with friends and family, and the Salina ceremony will allow students to bring more guests.

"With the fall commencement in Manhattan, it prevented some students and their families from attending," Kuhlman said.

Family attendance is important to students, giving them someone to share the day with, he said.

"They want to show their friends, grandparents and parents what they have accomplished," Kuhlman said.

Adding more guests isn't the only benefit to the ceremony, though. Homolka said the new location will allow the ceremony to be more personalized to students on the Salina campus.

Homolka also said the move to Salina has the support of K-State in Manhattan.

Officials file 3 more charges against fugitive

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Federal officials pleaded for the public's help to find Eric Robert Rudolph as they added substantial charges — the 1996 bombing at the Olympics and two other Atlanta attacks — against the man who has eluded a massive search for nine months.

Attorney General Janet Reno told a Wednesday news conference the complaint charging Rudolph with the Olympic blast and the 1997 bombings of a gay bar and an abortion clinic was filed with a federal court. New evidence against him was kept sealed to protect "the safety of witnesses who have come forward," she said.

Two people died, and many were injured by the six bombs that Rudolph is charged with setting off.

"Eric Rudolph is on the run" from earlier charges that he bombed a Birmingham, Ala., abortion clinic Jan. 29, Reno said. "We are not going to rest until we bring him to justice."

She re-emphasized the $1-million reward posted when Rudolph was put on the FBI's 10 most wanted list last May.

Accompanying Reno is FBI director Louis Freeh, who said the new charges were filed because agents have assembled "a very strong and substantial case ... against Mr. Rudolph with respect to the Olympic bombing" and the other Atlanta attacks.

Freeh disclosed another motive: "We want to emphasize the indiscriminate nature of these attacks, as well as the gravity of them, and hope that that will encourage anybody who has information to come forward," he said.

Reno and Freeh released a photograph showing Rudolph in khaki shorts and a green T-shirt that witnesses have led investigators to believe Rudolph was wearing in Atlanta the day of the Olympic blast. Freeh said neither witnesses nor thousands of videos and photographs sent in by private citizens put Rudolph at the bomb site itself.

"We hope anyone who sees this man will contact us immediately," Reno said, repeating the toll-free number: (888) ATF-BOMB, or (888) 283-2662.

For nine months, hundreds of FBI and state and local agents futilely have searched rugged, mountainous wilderness in western North Carolina where the 31-year-old Rudolph, a carpenter and an experienced woodsman, grew up and is at home. They said they believed he remains there.

Federal officials are aware that some residents of the area, where abortion is unpopular, have told reporters they would not turn Rudolph in if they came across him.

"We would hope that nobody would look at this defendant ... as a hero," Freeh said.

The bombs killed an off-duty police officer guarding the Birmingham clinic and a 40-year-old mother in Atlanta's Centennial Olympic Park, nearly killed a nurse in Birmingham, and injured a total of 120 people.

Freeh also accused Rudolph of "a planned and deliberate attack against law-enforcement officers, rescuers, first-aid individuals who came to the scenes" of the abortion clinic and gay bar bombings in Atlanta. At those two sites, a second bomb was timed to go off later, and federal agents were injured in the second blast at the Atlanta clinic.

Rudolph faces six counts of using an explosive against a facility in interstate commerce, one for each bomb. He could receive the death penalty.

All the bombs contained nails designed to maim people. Investigators have matched the nails in the two abortion clinic bombings to nails found in a storage shed rented by Rudolph, said an agent who requested anonymity.

A Tennessee gun dealer identified Rudolph as the man who bought 50 pounds of smokeless powder four years ago. A senior law enforcement official said the powder has been connected to the Olympic bomb.

new symbol that bears a striking resemblance to K-State's Powercat. Fairman said the symbol should be changed enough so that the public doesn't confuse the two images for each other, otherwise the image would violate copyright laws.

"It makes me feel kind of good to see a Missouri school wanting to use a logo that looks similar to ours," he said.

If the image used by the new Carthage tiger is deemed to be too similar, the school will be offered the same $1 contract for use that other high schools using the Powercat are offered, Fairman said.

Some K-State students said they don't support other schools using the logo.

"I feel that it is K-State, and it is a tradition that K-State has," said Heidi Christner, sophomore in kinesiology. "I don't think it's fair for other schools to use our logo."

Chad Chase, senior in finance, said if the Powercat logo is overused, it might become generic.

"I don't know why a high school would want to use our logo," Chase said. "I would think that they would want their own identity."

Freeman said the office attempts to restrict the use of the logo within the state for several reasons.

"We don't decline any requests, but we do try to be selective within Kansas," Fairman said. "We don't want (the schools) to get in trouble with taxpayers who may be Jayhawk fans."

Another criterion is that the school shouldn't be in proximity to Manhattan and K-State.

Fairman advised people that are concerned about possibly illegal Powercat usage to contact his office with the name and address of the suspected company or school.

Most of the time, the use of the logo is legal, Fairman said.

Sales of Powercat merchandise earn approximately $500,000 yearly. The money is added to K-State's general scholarship fund.

ENROLLMENT

Andrew Garrelts, senior in accounting, said he thought the new changes were unnecessary.

"The old way of priority enrollment by credit hours worked just fine," he said. "I don't think there was any need to change."

Students now may enroll over the Internet by going to the university home page and entering the KATS system. Students also may enroll by telephone, at 395-1200.

"Now students won't have to wait in line at Willard Hall to enroll," Foster said. "They can enroll over the World Wide Web or over the telephone."

Student Body President Tracey Mann said he supports the technology changes.

"This new enrollment program is fantastic," Mann said. "I plan on enrolling electronically next semester."

There will be a one-time $4 access charge made to each student's fee-payment account when they utilize the new system.

"This fee will help us pay for the system in four years, and a student may use the system to drop, add or change their schedule as much as they like during the semester with no additional charge," Foster said.

Students still may walk through enrollment at Willard, Foster said. But by using the new system, students can enroll out of town, in the convenience of their own home, between the hours of 7 a.m. to 9 p.m.

"The system was developed to better serve the students during the enrollment process," Foster said. "Convenience is the main attraction."

money would be distributed to communities.

In the late afternoon, Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., and House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., told reporters that agreement on the entire bill was imminent. But Democrats angrily insisted that unresolved problems remained, and indeed the two sides planned to continue bargaining into the night — and probably Thursday as well.

"All the big things are done," Gingrich said later. He said "less than one percent" of the differences remain to be solved.

Rep. David Obey, D-Wis., said disagreements also remained over how nearly $6 billion for farmers hurt by falling crop prices would be distributed, and the exact size and nature of a multibillion-dollar package for upgrading federal computers and other so-called emergencies.

Another remaining dispute was Clinton's plan for using scientific sampling to buttress the 2000 census, Obey said. Earlier this week, administration and GOP bargainers had agreed, in effect, to delay a decision on the issue for six months.

Bargaining was progressing over a Democratic plan to require most federal workers' health plans to cover prescription contraceptives. Negotiations were focusing on language that would exempt individual doctors who object to providing the devices for moral or religious reasons.

Agreement would clear the way for Congress to vote on a giant measure financing dozens of departments and agencies for the federal fiscal year that began Oct. 1. Included are the departments of Health and Human Services, Education, State, Commerce, Justice and Interior, as well as the foreign aid program.

The final vote, which seemed unlikely until Friday, would allow lawmakers to go home for re-election campaigns — something many incumbents have been itching to do. A deal also would end of a week of political brinkmanship that the two political parties waged leading up to the Nov. 3 elections that will determine who controls Congress.

After weeks of stories on Clinton's possible impeachment dominating the news — including last week's vote to launch a House impeachment inquiry — Democrats tried to use the budget battle to turn the focus to their fight for more education money.

"We've already won," Rep. Jim McDermott, D-Wash., said even before the deal was completed.

Padres clinch pennant with 5-0 victory

By BEN WALKER
The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Next stop on this surprising trip for Tony Gwynn and the San Diego Padres — Yankee Stadium.

The underdog Padres chalked up another 100-win victim Wednesday, reaching the World Series for the first time since 1984 when MVP Sterling Hitchcock beat the Atlanta Braves 5-0 in Game 6 of the NL championship series.

"Not many people gave us a chance against Houston. Not many people gave us a chance against Atlanta," Gwynn said.

"But here we are.

"It's been a long wait," he said. "We're going to be confident. I don't know if anybody else around the country will be confident in us."

The Braves had won two straight games, fueling speculation they might become the first team in baseball history to overcome an 0-3 deficit in the postseason.

But the Padres wrecked that plan, winning the series 4-2 with a five-run sixth inning off Tom Glavine. October hero Jim Leyritz broke a scoreless tie with an RBI grounder.

Now, it's on to New York for Game 1 Saturday night against the team that set an AL record with 114 victories. Kevin Brown will start for San Diego against ALCS MVP David Wells.

"For me it's a big thrill. I've never been to Yankee Stadium," Gwynn said.

At 38, Gwynn is the last remaining member from the Padres' only other trip to the Series, a five-game wipeout by Detroit.

The eight-time batting champion contributed two hits in the clincher against Atlanta.

Committee. The report is necessary for DB92's annual privilege-fee allocation review.

"Todd and I are working on putting something together," Walton said. "If we don't have it, we won't ask for anything."

Paul Prince, associate professor of journalism, who served as chair of the KSDB Advisory Board for the last three years, said he wasn't sure about the particulars of the bookkeeping problems.

"It's a matter of contention right now," Prince said.

The board asked for reports from the station manager, Prince said.

"We would get budget reports from time to time," Prince said, "But it's not like anyone (on the board) was looking over the books."

DB92 is funded through the university, student privilege fees and underwriting announcements. Because Potillo's salary comes from the university portion of the funds, Dean Peter Nicholls of the College of Arts and Sciences will have final authority on the personnel review.

Nicholls would not comment on review procedures or the status of Potillo's contract.

While the bookkeeping analysis and review are ongoing, the advisory board met Tuesday for the first time this semester.

David MacFarland, associated professor of journalism, and new advisory board chair, said past policies played a part in the current problems. The policies need to be reviewed to protect the station's interests in the future, he said.

"What went astray was that policies weren't being clearly articulated and followed," MacFarland said. "We may need to update the policy."

At Tuesday's meeting, the board unanimously passed a resolution calling for changes in the station's staff structure and duties.

MacFarland said he would like to see more power in the hands of the student employees.

"We recommended a position of program director be developed. It allows another layer of student policy," MacFarland said.

The program director would assume some of the duties of the station manager, such as programming decisions. The station manager would focus more on business aspects.

Committee revises greek bodybuilding competition

6 injuries in 2-day span cause group to examine issues of safety, liability

BY ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fraternities and sororities almost lost another chance to earn points for this year's homecoming competition.

The All-University Homecoming Committee and Greek Affairs called a meeting with all homecoming chairs, bodybuilding chairs and chapter presidents to discuss the bodybuilding competition due to safety concerns.

It wasn't canceled, but there were revisions made to the competition. At 9:00 p.m. Thursday, all bodybuilding chairs were required to attend a safety clinic sponsored by the K-State cheerleading squad at Brandeberry Indoor Complex. The K-State cheerleaders also will have three spotters on the mat during the competition, and all houses are required to have at least three spotters at practices. This will be the spotters' only job.

Pat Bosco, dean of student of life, recommended the bodybuilding competition be limited to one night rather than two nights of competition, but the committee voted to keep it as regularly scheduled.

"Rather than disrupt the students' schedule for next week, we decided to keep it as it is for this year," Heather Lansdowne, committee chair, said.

The meeting was called because Bosco said that for the last two days he had been visiting lawyers, doctors, parents, students and members of the administration after six bodybuilding injuries were reported Tuesday night. Of the six, he said there were two broken legs and one ruptured spleen.

Bosco said he wanted to know why the university was even doing bodybuilding as part of the homecoming competition.

He said that not only is there a safety issue, but he's also had complaints about it interfering with academics.

"As your dean, help me understand what's going on," Bosco said.

Ryan Laudermilk, ambassador and elections chair, said that in the 1970s and 1980s, bodybuilding wasn't as risky as it is now.

"I think in the process of one-upping everybody and higher competition, that it's gotten riskier," he said.

Laudermilk also said the numbers were down this year because there were so many tests during the competition, and people had to drop out.

"I think that could be a very significant thing," he said.

Cade Keenan, Interfraternity Council president, said the meeting was useful for an evaluation of homecoming next year, but this year, there were three options. He said they could do nothing about the situation, modify it or get rid of it.

There were few in favor of getting rid of the competition, and Bosco said doing nothing wasn't an option.

Mandy Reese, member of Gamma Phi Beta, said it wouldn't be right to quit now.

"We're in the seventh inning. We can't change the rules this late in the game," she said.

Courtney Battenfield, K-State cheerleader and member of Kappa Kappa Gamma, said everyone had put too much time in it to stop now, and that if the stunts are taught correctly, there won't be any injuries.

There were two mandatory safety clinics for all houses at the beginning of bodybuilding, but Bosco and the committee said they felt another one was needed.

Many of the homecoming chairs said they didn't think another clinic would be helpful, but Lansdowne said they really needed to focus on safety.

"Less than an hour ago, we were ready to cancel the whole thing," she said.

"One of the things that saved us is saying we're going to focus on safety. I don't think it's all that much to ask."

Lansdowne said reemphasizing safety in the last week of practice would be valuable.

One thing that could make the practices safer is requiring the use of mats, Laudermilk said. However, there are not enough facilities with mats that are affordable.

Cory vonLeonrod, member of Delta Upsilon, was one person who spoke for canceling the competition.

"I don't feel we have any business being out there in the first place," he said.

The issue of liability also was raised, but no answers were found.

All bodybuilders are required to sign waivers before they begin practice.

The committee decided to focus on safety for the last week and reevaluate the competition for next year.

"The position of the homecoming committee is to focus on safety this year and reduce as much risk as possible," Lansdowne said.

Kelly Reiboldt, who ruptured her spleen, is out of intensive care and is doing much better, Reese said.

Cat basketball gets spotlight for weekend

BY JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State basketball will be one of the featured sports events this weekend, and the team hasn't even practiced.

The attention won't be focused solely on this year's squad, however. Much of it will be placed on former Wildcat Mitch Richmond's induction into the K-State Hall of Fame tonight, along with the 1998 Basketball Ticket Campout, which begins Sunday.

The induction ceremony will begin at 8:30 tonight in Union Forum Hall. The ceremony is open to the public and is free of charge.

One of the best players ever to wear K-State purple, Richmond was a 1987-88 first-team All-Big 8 Conference selection and first-team All-American in his senior season at K-State. He stands fifth on the Cats' all-time scoring list with 1,327 points.

Outside of K-State, Richmond has been a member of the 1988 and 1996 Olympic teams, was the NBA Rookie-of-the-Year in 1989 and has appeared in five NBA All-Star games, including 1995, when he was named the game's MVP.

He now plays for the Washington Wizards.

Once the honors have been bestowed on former basketball greats, the new breed of K-State basketball players get their chance to impress at the Basketball Ticket Campout.

This year's version relocates to Bramlage Coliseum after many years at Ahearn Field House and begins at noon Sunday. Campers will have a chance to set up their tents until 5 p.m., and at 5:15 the men's basketball team will scrimmage and participate in shooting drills.

Pizza and T-shirts will be distributed to campers, and the women's basketball team will be host to a late-night snack attack.

On Monday morning, the men's team will hand out doughnuts, and at 8:45 a.m., the drawing for each group's place in the ICAT line begins. From 9 a.m. to 11 a.m., ICAT tickets can be picked up, and from noon to 5 p.m., general admission tickets can be picked up.

Ticket problems spur meeting to find ways to improve system

BY JAIMIE HARTTER

The football ticket fiasco is on its way to being resolved.

MANN

Student Body President Tracey Mann called a meeting of the Student Governing Association to reform the glitches with the current football ticket system. He met with the Cabinet, Senate interns and a small-group discussions method class to get feedback on what to do to resolve this situation.

Nothing was proposed definitely but many ideas were presented. The discussion methods class suggested students should be able to purchase only one set of football tickets to decrease waiting in lines and potential scalping.

K-Staters, elementary students take hands-on approach to art

A little girl with paint on her hands spelled her name out in orange paint and exclaimed that her painting looked weird.

Similar exclamations echoed through the Riley County Grade School gymnasium as students from K-State's Art for Elementary Schools class taught the grade school students.

The elementary school kids' freshly made prints were spread along the gymnasium floor as a new group worked with paints and rollers to transform the glue print they had made two days before into a work of art.

Lynda Andrus, professor of art, who teaches the class, said the day's events were a good experience for her students.

"It is a lot of work, but the students like it," Andrus said. "It is an opportunity for them to see what it is like to be teachers."

Tracy Henderson, a fourth-grade teacher at Riley, said it was a great chance for the students to experience art.

"The kids are really excited about having someone new come in," she said. "Kids love art anyway, and it is a cool thing to have come in."

Henderson said it was an even better experience for the kids because the students were from K-State.

"It is cool to have K-State here, and the kids think that is pretty neat," Henderson said.

Because the school does not have an art department, Henderson said it tries to organize one project like this every year.

Kendra Wendt, junior in elementary education, said she enjoyed teaching the children for a variety of reasons.

"It is a fun and exciting project, and it is great to do something like this because they don't have an art program here," Wendt said.

Normally, Andrus' class meets in a classroom, sifting through an extensive curriculum. In the class, students learn how to write lesson plans and how to evaluate art. Art history also is taught because the amount of knowledge and art experience Andrus' students have varies.

"It is a pretty busy class, and the students do a lot," Andrus said.

Andrus said the class has influenced some of its members to become art teachers, and the class benefits those who take it.

■ See ART on PAGE 8

Under the direction of Lynda Andrus, 41 Art for Elementary Schools students helped about 500 kindergarten through eighth-grade Riley County Grade School students make prints this week. The project took two days, with the students making the print molds on Tuesday and the actual prints Thursday.

Prediction sytem fails to help flood victims

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A monitoring system predicted flash flooding at least 30 minutes before seven people were swept to their deaths in Brush Creek last week, officials said.

Although the Kansas City Fire Department never got the information because someone unplugged part of the warning system from an electrical outlet, Fire Chief Rick Brisbin said he doubted firefighters could have responded any faster than they did.

"If the information you get is timely and you have the resources to deploy, it works," Brisbin said. "We ran out of people to answer calls and barricade intersections."

Even if the warning system hadn't been unplugged, Brisbin said Wednesday that the city has no contingency plans to deal with flash flooding on Brush Creek — despite a 1977 flood that devastated the Country Club Plaza and killed 25.

The fire chief said he wanted to draw up such plans and involve other city departments such as police, water services, public works, and parks and recreation that could help barricade intersections and control traffic on flood-prone streets quickly.

City Manager Bob Collins said he thought the city needs to work on its disaster planning.

"The process should focus on the time before the disaster so that when we have things like warning systems, they're up and running, and their operation is routine," Collins said.

The seven people swept into the creek from the Prospect Avenue Bridge were among 11 who died in the Kansas City metro area in the flash flooding Oct. 4.

The Kansas City Star examined data compiled by the National Weather Service from the city's monitoring system the night of the storm. The information was identical to that which the Fire Department should have received.

The warning system installed by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers in 1995 is maintained by the city. It consists of an array of water level and rainfall gauges throughout the Brush Creek watershed. Each of 17 sensors is linked by radio to both the fire department communications center and the National Weather Service.

Brisbin said the receiving equipment for the $275,000 warning system was unplugged at the fire department by an employee who was working on the equipment and later forgot to reconnect it. No information was reported on city terminals at the fire communications center.

Cult leader, followers vanish, families fear possible mass suicide

DENVER — The leader of a doomsday cult who predicted the destruction of Denver last weekend has vanished along with about 50 of his followers, raising fears they are bent on mass suicide.

Followers of Monte Kim Miller's group, Concerned Christians, have sold their belongings and abandoned their homes.

Cult watchers said they believe the group might be headed to Jerusalem because of Miller's belief he would die there in December 1999 and be resurrected three days later.

Miller founded Concerned Christians in the early 1980s, preaching against the evils of cults and New Age movements.

Hal Mansfield, director of the Fort Collins-based Religious Movement Resource Center, which has been monitoring the Denver-based Concerned Christians for at least two years, said Miller might have started the movement as a financial scam.

Critics said the group has transformed itself into an apocalyptic personality cult.

Miller, 44, said God was using him as a vehicle to speak to his followers. After prophesying the Apocalypse would begin with an earthquake in Denver last Saturday, the cult leader and about 50 of his disciples disappeared from sight.

Denver police officer Mark Roggeman said at least 20 of Miller's followers have contacted relatives since Saturday and promised to keep in touch.

If Miller's predictions fail to materialize, tragedy could result, said Bill Honsberger, a Christian missionary who has monitored the group.

He said the cult leader is capable of leading followers to mass suicide, much like the 39 members of the Heaven's Gate cult who killed themselves near San Diego in 1997.

Nicolette Weaver, a 16-year-old Denver girl who was a Concerned Christians member for nearly 10 years, said she fears the worst.

She left to live with her biological father two years ago when Miller "started going off the deep end."

Her mother and stepfather stayed with Miller.

"He is so controlling, they would do anything he said," she said. "He has been prophesying the end of world for so long. When it doesn't happen, he will have to find some way for their world to end."

Weaver said Miller had meetings every week or two at his house, sermonizing that America is Satan and the government is evil.

"Sometimes when he was speaking for God, he'd roll his eyes back and then close them and get real dramatic," she said.

Teen pregnany rates at 20-year low in U.S.

NEW YORK — The pregnancy rate among U.S. teen-agers hit a 20-year low in 1995, and the abortion rate also dropped during the first half of the decade, according to a study released Thursday.

The authors concluded that more teens are using contraceptives or abstaining from sex, echoing a 1995 government study.

"A lot of the messages that have been put out about the importance of delaying sexual activity ... seem to be having an effect," said Susan Tew, a spokeswoman for the Alan Guttmacher Institute, which released the report.

"More teens seem to be delaying sexual activity ... and among those teens who are sexually active there appears to be better contraceptive use," she said.

One hundred and one of every 1,000 females between ages 15 and 19 were pregnant in 1995, the most recent year for which data was available, the study found.

The abortion rate fell from 40.6 per thousand teen-age girls in 1990 to 30.0 per thousand girls in 1995. It had hovered around 42 and 43 per thousand during the 1980s.

Though the teen pregnancy rate dropped dramatically, the nation continues to have one of the highest rates of all industrialized countries, Tew said.

The decrease in abortion largely was caused by the drop in teen pregnancies, but there also was a drop among those choosing to have abortions, Tew said. Among teens who became pregnant, 30 percent chose to have an abortion in 1995, down from 34 percent in 1990.

The Center for Disease Control and Prevention announced in July that teen pregnancy rates were down in every state that reports data. The CDC was unable to compile a national figure because some large states — California, Illinois and Florida — do not report abortion statistics.

The Guttmacher Institute used the CDC figures and its own survey of abortion providers to come up with a national teen pregnancy rate.

The number of teen pregnancies reported in 1995 — 889,980 — was the lowest since 1973, when 916,630 teen pregnancies were reported. The total includes births, abortions and miscarriages.

The teen pregnancy rate hit a high of 117 per 1,000 teenage girls in 1990. The 1995 rate is the lowest since 1975, according to the Guttmacher Institute.

Viennese bring new school architecture exhibition to K-State

ON DISPLAY
"The New Schoolhouse" exhibition will be in Seaton Hall's Chang Gallery through Oct. 23. Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Admission is free.

■ 3 representatives from Vienna, Austria share designs with students, faculty.

By RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

Given the opportunity in the 1980s to add 66 new schools to its neighborhoods, the city of Vienna opted for modern architecture.

Instead of the institutional humdrum quality usually associated with school design, the Viennese school authority created a building program that brought Austria's foremost architects on board to design schools that glisten in glass, rethink the traditional school plan and infuse life into decaying neighborhoods.

"It was a bold decision to build an exhibition of contemporary architecture," said Kurt Scholz, president of the Vienna Board of Education.

Manhattan has a chance to see these educational experiments firsthand, at an exhibition on the new Vienna schoolhouses in the Chang Gallery until Oct. 23. Three representatives of Austria are visiting town this week, meeting with local school board officials, K-State students, and faculty from the College of Architecture, Planning and Design and the College of Education.

Viennese architect and critic Leopold Dungl praised the Vienna School Building Programme 2000 for the opportunities it provided modern architects to bring contemporary design to a city filled with historical architecture. Dungl addressed architects, students and faculty in a Thursday evening lecture, "To Set a Precedent: New School Architecture in Vienna," in the Union Little Theatre.

Also addressing the audience was Scholz, who, as school board president, was one of the driving forces behind the building program.

"In Vienna, you can walk from one fine example of modern architecture to another," Scholz said. "But it's much too early to say what the influence of these buildings on education is."

Scholz said it is difficult to teach architecture to young students.

"You can teach from chalk or give people a chance to live in contemporary architecture," he said. "I think the second choice makes more sense."

Vienna's program responded to two new social needs faced by the city: an increasing population and the afternoon daycare required by households with two working parents.

Among the architects represented in the exhibition are Pritzker Prize-winner Hans Hollein, Helmut Richter and Boris Podrecca.

The exhibition is organized around specific school projects and architects, with a brief history of Austrian education systems.

Although at times critical in his lecture of some of the new architecture, Dungl said the opportunity allowed architects to reconfigure old traditions in ways that created environments for children that offered a variety of meanings.

"Perhaps that's the function of architecture — not to be discovered at one sight, but taken in time to notice all the qualities," Dungl said.

No one there knew Matthew Shepard. No one had been his friend, seen him smile or heard him laugh. But his death touched them all.

A group of more than 80 students, faculty and community members gathered Thursday night in All Faiths Chapel to remember a life cut short by hatred. The memorial service for the 21-year-old gay student who died Monday was sponsored by the Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society.

"It was such a terrible crime," Mary Renee Smith, BGLS president, said. "I hope we can take this opportunity to come together and put aside our differences. Everyone can agree that this kind of crime is terrible."

Shepard died early Monday at the Poudre Valley Hospital in Fort Collins, Colo., after he was pistol whipped and tied half-naked to a wood rail in near-freezing temperatures in Laramie, Wyo.

Russel Arthur Henderson, 21, and Aaron James McKinney, 22, are charged with first-degree murder in Shepard's death.

The death has left many to wonder how safe people with different sexual orientations really are.

"My first reaction was that this could happen in Manhattan," Jeremy Mittel, BGLS vice president said. "Hopefully, people will learn tolerance and realize people get killed for being gay."

The service provided an opportunity for people to come together and grieve Shepard's death. Smith said she hoped the service would help provide closure.

"The service shows that this city and campus care," Smith said.

Dan Melton, freshman in mechanical engineering, speaks during a memorial service in honor of Matthew Shepard on Thursday night at All Faiths Chapel. Shepard, 21, who died Monday, was a student at the University of Wyoming.

Shepard's death has sparked services throughout the country. Both Wichita State University and the University of Kansas had services in remembrance of Shepard.

"It's important for K-State to pause and reflect on this hideous tragedy," Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said.

"I hope that those in attendance as well as those who read this will be reminded that silence kills. It's important for us to speak up when we see or hear injustices in our home, school, church or where we work."

Through Shepard's death, some hard lessons are being learned, said Julia Breen, graduate student in speech pathology.

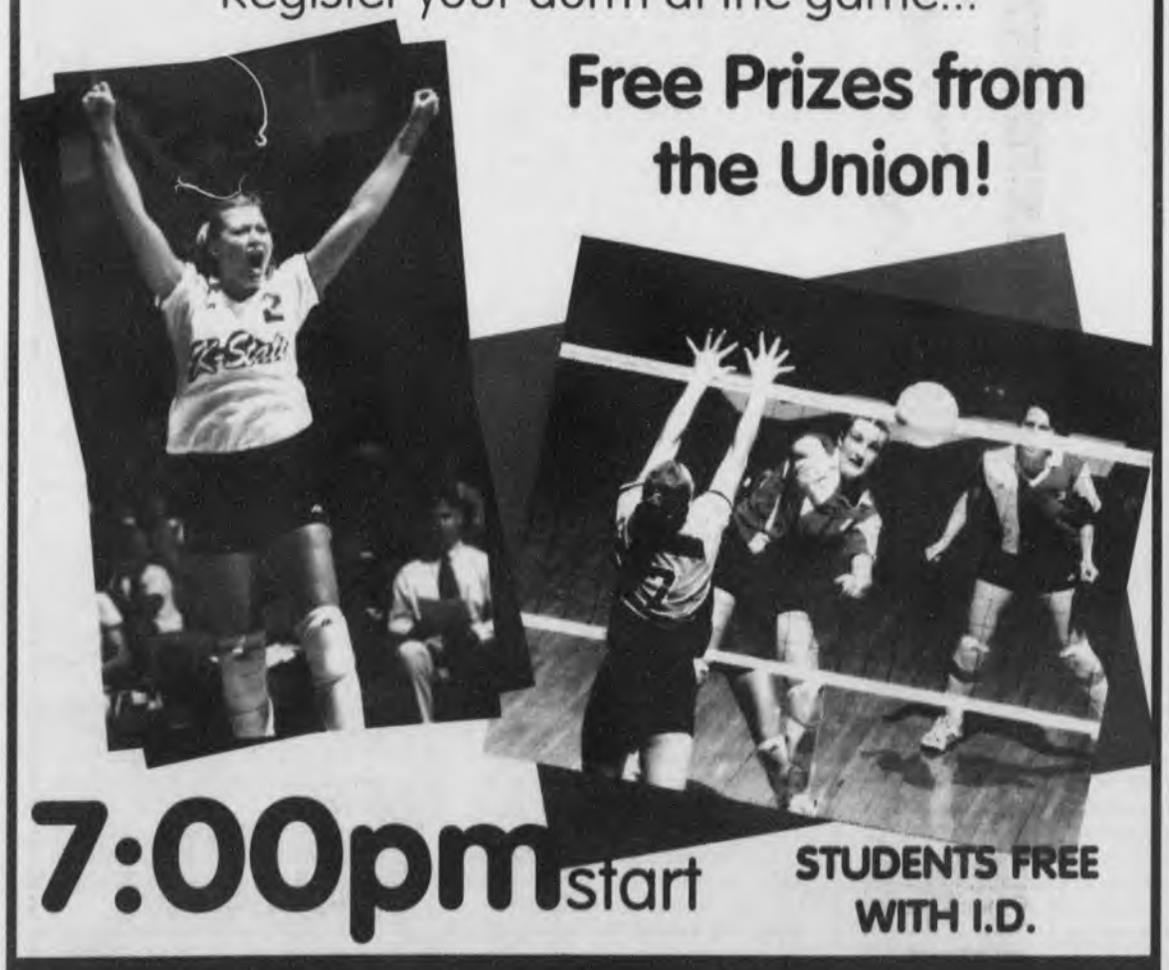
"His death shows that people are not going to sit down and take discrimination against those with alternative lifestyles," Breen said.

Brenda Lea Mayberry, president of the local chapter of the National Organization for Women, said she hopes the service will make people think about tolerance of others.

"It's making people re-focus and think if they are really as tolerant as they think they are," Mayberry said.

"We need to realize that hurting someone because you don't agree with them doesn't make sense."

Shepard's death also points out that intolerance can start at any level, not just violence.



"It didn't start with just a beating," Mittel said. "It starts with jokes and comments. It ends in a beating."

OUR VIEW

Natatorium serves K-State adequately

Recreational Services will consider a consultant's report on the feasibility of adding a pool to the Chester A. Peters Recreation Complex.

The possibility of adding a pool has been around since the $7.9 million expansion to the Rec Complex was completed in 1995. At that time, the architects in charge of the expansion were asked to do some preliminary drawings of an expansion to the complex, featuring an indoor swimming pool. The Rec Services Council said it sees the project as being the next phase in the Rec Complex's growth, and it accordingly allocated $10,000 out of the Rec Services' budget to study the feasibility of adding a swimming pool. With the money, it hired an architect and a consultant to identify potential funding sources and provide estimates on construction costs.

To the editorial board, this project sounds like one of the finest examples of pork-barrel spending since the federal government spent $219,000 to teach college students how to watch television. The idea of building a new swimming pool at the Rec Complex when an excellent facility waits just down the street is ludicrous.

Many might not realize the money they pay for Rec Services is divided between the Rec Complex and the Natatorium, where K-State has two beautiful pools and a diving well, waiting to be used. The Natatorium has been the site of the Kansas State High School Activities Association boys and girls swim-and-dive state championships over the course of the past year; it is the home pool for the Manhattan Marlins, a United States swimming team. It also is home of the Manhattan High School swim-and-dive team. We would assume, then, that if the Natatorium is sufficient for their purposes, it should be sufficient for ours as well.

Rec Services said the pool is inadequate for instructional purposes, but remodeling the Rec Complex seems way out of proportion for the advantages gained by having another pool to use. We can't ignore the costs of this operation either, namely, the required student privilege fee increase for the expansion, the influx of greater numbers of people to the already-saturated Rec Complex and the desertion of the southwestern side of campus.

Think about it: We buy our athletic tickets from Bramlage Coliseum, we enroll and pay fees by mail, we work out at the Rec Complex and we watch sports out on a remote corner of campus. We are abandoning the traditions and history that surround Memorial Stadium and Ahearn Field House, and as a result, we slowly are abandoning our past.

In addition, there are many issues we could better spend a privilege fee increase on, namely Hale library, a campus parking garage or even the Saferide program. For the time being, a Rec Complex pool should not be a priority.

TASTELESS TV

Television sucks, and this time it is the commercials that are to blame

AARON FRUEHLING/COLLEGIAN

VIEWPOINT

MICHAEL NEFF

I was watching television the other night when I saw something that outraged me. No, not more about the Clinton impeachment inquiry, not how K-State got leapfrogged by somebody like Tulane in the Associated Press poll nor how the Tibetan economy is affecting our stock market.

Nope, I saw a new Dick Edwards commercial. Now, I'm sure the Dick Edwards staff are really nice people, they just have a lack of judgment for entertainment value. That's what bothers me. Come on, I know you've seen them before: the newest episode in the saga of awful commercials has a bunch of people out dancing, and I use this term loosely, in the street. Why, you ask? Because they've just found "rock-bottom prices!"

Well, hell, I feel like dancing myself! Look at me, I'm grooving now, daddy!

My first car cost me one hundred bucks, and I most certainly wasn't dancing then, so I'm not dancing now.

Not to pick on the fine Dick Edwards people. Being an employee at Sirloin Stockade, I'm less than impressed with its radio commercial, a spin-off on "The X-Files." It appears the Mulder-like character thinks there is a conspiracy as to how we serve so much great food. Let me tell you, it ain't aliens. Well, at least we employees didn't have to form a conga line on the buffet to celebrate meatloaf night. Remind me to thank my boss for that.

I think you get the gist of what I'm saying. This requires a call to action. What we need is a new job, a "commercial regulator." He or she could view every potential commercial and deem if it is worthy of taking up thirty seconds of our time. If a commercial make the grade, like a beer commercial, kudos. If not, then severe sanctions must be imposed. Call it tough love. Each commercial would be graded on its stupidity, creativity and entertainment value (quick note: If a "commercial regulator" does happen to exist, fire him, he sucks).

Having said all that, let me run by you the five worst commercials of all time, according to the K-Staters I polled.

5. Any laxative or feminine hygiene commercial — there's nothing more annoying to see someone dancing around like a fool, and when you ask them why they're dancing, they tell you it's because they're no longer constipated. That's great (sarcastic tone), just what I needed to know.

4. The Psychic Friends Hotline commercials — 'nuff said? Or did your psychic friend already tell you what I was going to say?

3. The Dick Edwards series — read the first paragraph again.

2. Mini-van commercials — now this is one I wouldn't have thought of. However, unless I see John Wayne behind the wheel of a mini-van, I'm not buying one, that is, unless Dick Edwards can get me dancing in the streets with their prices.

1. Those 10-10-321/10-10-220/10-10-666 commercials — I forgive Dick Edwards, I forgive Sirloin Stockade, I forgive my parents for feeding me paint chips when I was seven, just SOMEBODY get those off the air! I'm never on the phone for more than two minutes at a time, and I'm too lazy to punch all those numbers while dialing. In fact, I'm not even typing this. I'm dictating it to my roommate and he's typing it (Mike's a jerk). I'm pretty sure I can trust him to type everything I say.

Sure, there have been some good commercials, too, but a few bad apples spoil the bunch. Or is it a few bad apples don't spoil the bunch? Who cares? If we could eliminate all the commercials except for the Nike football and the the Snickers commercials, I could finally find peace and be happy. Who knows, maybe I'll start a conga line on the Sirloin Stockade buffet.

I'm a columnist, I can say whatever the heck I want

I was going to write this entire column backwards just because I could. But then I realized how long that would take, not just for you to read, but for me to write and our saviors, the copy editors, to correct my poor grammar.

Fun be that wouldn't?

I then thought I might write this column in just one sentence. Author Jack Kerouac wrote several chapters in this manner. I, however, would have too much trouble with grammar. I might give that idea a go later in the semester when I am truly delirious from sleep deprivation.

This is going where?

Some people, upon learning I am a columnist, are amazed at the power they think I have. They believe I can write what I want and affect how many people think. That is where I differ with them.

It is not just because I cannot write certain words.

I don't want the power to affect how people think; I just want them to think, period.

Some people, upon becoming a columnist, will use their power to try to influence others' thoughts. Believing that is their job, they try to tell people how to think on certain issues.

Read me; I'm right. You're wrong if you don't agree.

Nothing could be further from the truth, my friend. We are not to write so as to offend and get hate mail, nor are we to say everything tastes like a peach. Our job responsibilities fit somewhere in between the two extremes.

We are here to make people think.

We are some of the privileged people in the news media, because we can be creative with the language. We don't have to follow rigid guidelines about what we can and cannot write or about how we write. This opens up numerous possibilities.

This is also where we get the power trip.

I do not want the power to tell people how to think. My opinion is no greater than theirs just because I am in print. The only power I want is to make people think, even if it is only for the brief time that they read or glance over my column.

I realize a lot of what I am writing might sound ridiculous to certain people, and therefore, I discredit myself in my own writing. After all, columns are to be taken as opinions and not as facts.

They also are to be taken with a beverage.

I am trying to get people to realize how ludicrous certain socially acceptable ways are by offering solutions that seem as ludicrous. I leave it up to you to find Aristotle's golden mean, (see, I'm learning, Professor Lamb) a harmony between the two.

If you find his mean, you don't have to return it. He's dead.

I live my life off an adage I learned from preschool or elementary school — an adage that subsequently disappeared from junior high in both its presence and people adhering to it. Again with the gold standard, I live my life by the Golden Rule.

Do unto others as you would have them do unto you.

I also add the preface 'using common sense', because sometimes, things are done inadvertently simply because people do not know the extenuating circumstances. As long as these things were not done because of a lack of common sense, there is more leeway.

But as Ice-T says, it ain't like that.

Laws aren't made by this standard. People are not allowed to live by the Golden Rule, and as a result, some people use the laws to their advantage either for financial gain or for their ego. Just to be better than you.

Think about it.

This is not directed at any one person; these are just the ramblings of a 20-year-old college columnist.

Choosing major isn't important; any degree will land you a job

Major-hoppers.

That is the title I give to all my friends who have had more majors than classes during their college careers. Some of them just switch back and forth between the same two majors, and others change from biology to chemistry to botany to interpretive dance and back again.

I always poke fun at these people when I see them. My first question is always, "So, what's your major this week?" And it usually IS different from the last time I talked to them.

I have been attending K-State for going on a year and a half now, and I have never changed my major. I have stayed with mass communications/public relations the entire time, and I have enjoyed every day of it.

Or so I thought.

Last week, I did a dangerous thing. I sat down and asked myself why I chose that major.

My answer scared me.

Did my parents tell me to do it? Nope. Was it because I had a lot of friends in that area? Not really. Had I tried it in the past and enjoyed it? No experience with it whatsoever.

The more I thought, the more concerned I became. When people ask me what I am majoring in, I tell them public relations. They always smile and act impressed, and then they ask the golden question.

Them: "What will you do when you graduate?"

Me: "Uhhh ... I guess I don't really know."

This is frightening.

I tell myself I shouldn't be worried. My instructors are teaching me what being in public relations is all about. That is why I came to college, to learn a new skill, right? I shouldn't expect to know just what to do after graduation already, right?

Still, no definite answer.

So, I think to myself, maybe I should change my major. If I am so worried about not comprehending this one, then why am I in it?

What do I change it to? What else do I like to do?

I like computers, but I can't add, so computer science is out. I like politics, but I hate politicians, so political science is out. I don't do agriculture, so that eliminates quite a few majors at K-State.

How about I just drop out and go get a job? That would be great. Then I could work 60 hours a week making minimum wage and getting bossed around by some guy named Cleatus who has more money invested in his belt buckle than in all his personal hygiene products combined.

I talk to my fellow students, and they tell me they have experienced the same feelings. How did they deal with it?

Alcohol and lots of it. But that isn't an option for me either.

Some words of wisdom from my high school counselor creep into my head.

"It doesn't matter what kind of degree you get, as long as you get a degree. You will probably end up doing something totally different than your major in the long run."

You know what? He was right.

I have found over the past year that you don't really need a specific degree to work in a field you enjoy.

I spent my entire summer working in the computer department of a Fortune 1000 company, and not a single person I worked with had a degree in computer science.

After thinking it over, I am still a public relations major. I still don't know exactly what PR people do or what I will do in the future. At least I have a college to call home.

And I won't be working for Cleatus any time soon.

Infraction could make victory against Huskers meaningless

Editor,

I've been a K-State football season-ticket holder since I graduated from K-State in 1993. I'm proud to be a Wildcat and have been able to watch the Wildcats grow into a respectable Division I program.

After reading the article "Frank Murphy Playing the Waiting Game," a feeling of dread came over me. It seems obvious to me that what happened was a significant infraction, and I applaud Coach Bill Snyder and the staff for stopping what happened and reporting this infraction to the NCAA before it found out. Hopefully, our willingness to stop "gifts" like that in our football program and hand down our own justice as well as the NCAA's will cushion the ruling by the NCAA in the future.

Unfortunately, all I can think is, "What the hell were the boosters thinking?" not to mention Murphy. It doesn't take a rocket scientist to know that giving money to players is illegal and taking it is just as bad. I only can hope the ruling doesn't come the week of the Nebraska game, because if it does and we lose the appeal, I can imagine that even a victory against Nebraska will be moot.

Council to determine feasibility of adding pool to Rec Complex

By Russell Fortmeyer
Kansas State Collegian

Students might be asked to help pay for the construction of a pool at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex as early as this spring.

Our Opinion
The Collegian editorial board doesn't see a need for this project.
See page 4.

Raydon Robel, director of Recreational Services, said that if the Recreational Services Council approves a feasibility study conducted by a private consultant at its next meeting, Rec Services could go to Student Senate with a proposed new student privilege fee this spring. He also said it is likely it would ask a referendum be given to gauge student opinion.

"As we finished up the expansion in 1995, there had already been some talk with users that a pool would complete the project," Robel said.

In 1997, the Rec Council allocated $10,000 out of the center's budget to study the possibility of adding a pool. The money was used to hire a consultant and an architect to determine the feasibility of an expansion. This study would provide estimates for construction cost and potential financing.

"That $10,000 came out of the Recreation Services budget as a very preliminary step in a long process," Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said.

That process is coming to an end within the next month. Rec Services Council will meet next at 7 a.m. Thursday, although the study probably will not be available for discussion until November. The Council consists of a majority of students drawn from various campus groups, along with faculty and staff.

Tracey Mann, student body president and Council member, said he and his cabinet have discussed the pool proposal but do not plan to support the project one way or another until the student voice is heard in a spring referendum.

The last time a referendum was used for a building project, it involved a proposed privilege fee to fund the expansion of KSU Stadium. It failed to receive the 60 percent needed to qualify as a passing referendum. Student fees that finance campus construction need the support of a student referendum before they are enacted.

The Rec Complex just finished a 2-year-long expansion in 1995 at a cost of $7.9 million. The expansion provided an indoor track, larger workout rooms, more basketball courts and renovated practice fields.

Robel said that at the time of the expansion, he asked the architects, Ken Ebert Design Group, to do some preliminary drawings of where a future expansion could occur. He said if a pool is built, it probably would be on the east or south side of the complex in order to tie into existing locker rooms.

Robel said the feasibility process was undertaken because the existing Natatorium near Ahearn Field House is of inadequate depth for new exercise needs and broader use. He said that the attendance at the Natatorium also had declined recently.

"Its design was more competitive in nature than instructional," Robel said.

The 1995 expansion project was paid for with a student privilege fee, which began in 1992. At that time, other student-sponsored bonds were retiring, so students redirected money into a recreation fee for construction bonds on the expansion. In other words, privilege fees did not increase.

"Where the expansion/renovation of the Rec Complex was a re-allocation of resources, this would be a straight bond issue where we would be looking for additional funds from students," Robel said.

Wildcats return home to defend, improve national ranking

WIECK

BY BRENT STOVER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State volleyball team has put in a lot of mileage the last two weekends.

In fact, the Cats have traveled every direction but west for their last four matches. This weekend, however, they're back in Manhattan for a couple of key Big 12 Conference showdowns.

"It's going to be so awesome," freshman Disney Bronnenberg said. "We're ready to be home again in front of our fans."

After a 2-2 mark on the last two road trips, K-State finally gets to return to Manhattan and put its No. 23 ranking on the line. The Cats jumped two spots in this week's poll and are ranked higher than any team in K-State history.

"It's all about K-State pride," senior Val Wieck said. "Number 23 is good, but we know we can do better."

The Cats will have the chance to do better tonight when they take on the Baylor Bears.

K-State has beaten the Bears in all four matches between the teams since the Big 12 was formed. In fact, the only time the Bears have beaten the Cats was in the series opener on Sept. 3, 1993.

Baylor is 7-10 overall and just 1-5 in conference play this season.

Saturday night, the Wildcats are host to Texas Tech. The Red Raiders are 13-6 overall and 2-4 in the Big 12. However, all four of their losses have come to the top-four teams in the league.

Texas Tech has been swept by Texas A&M, Texas and Nebraska. It fell to Colorado last weekend in four games.

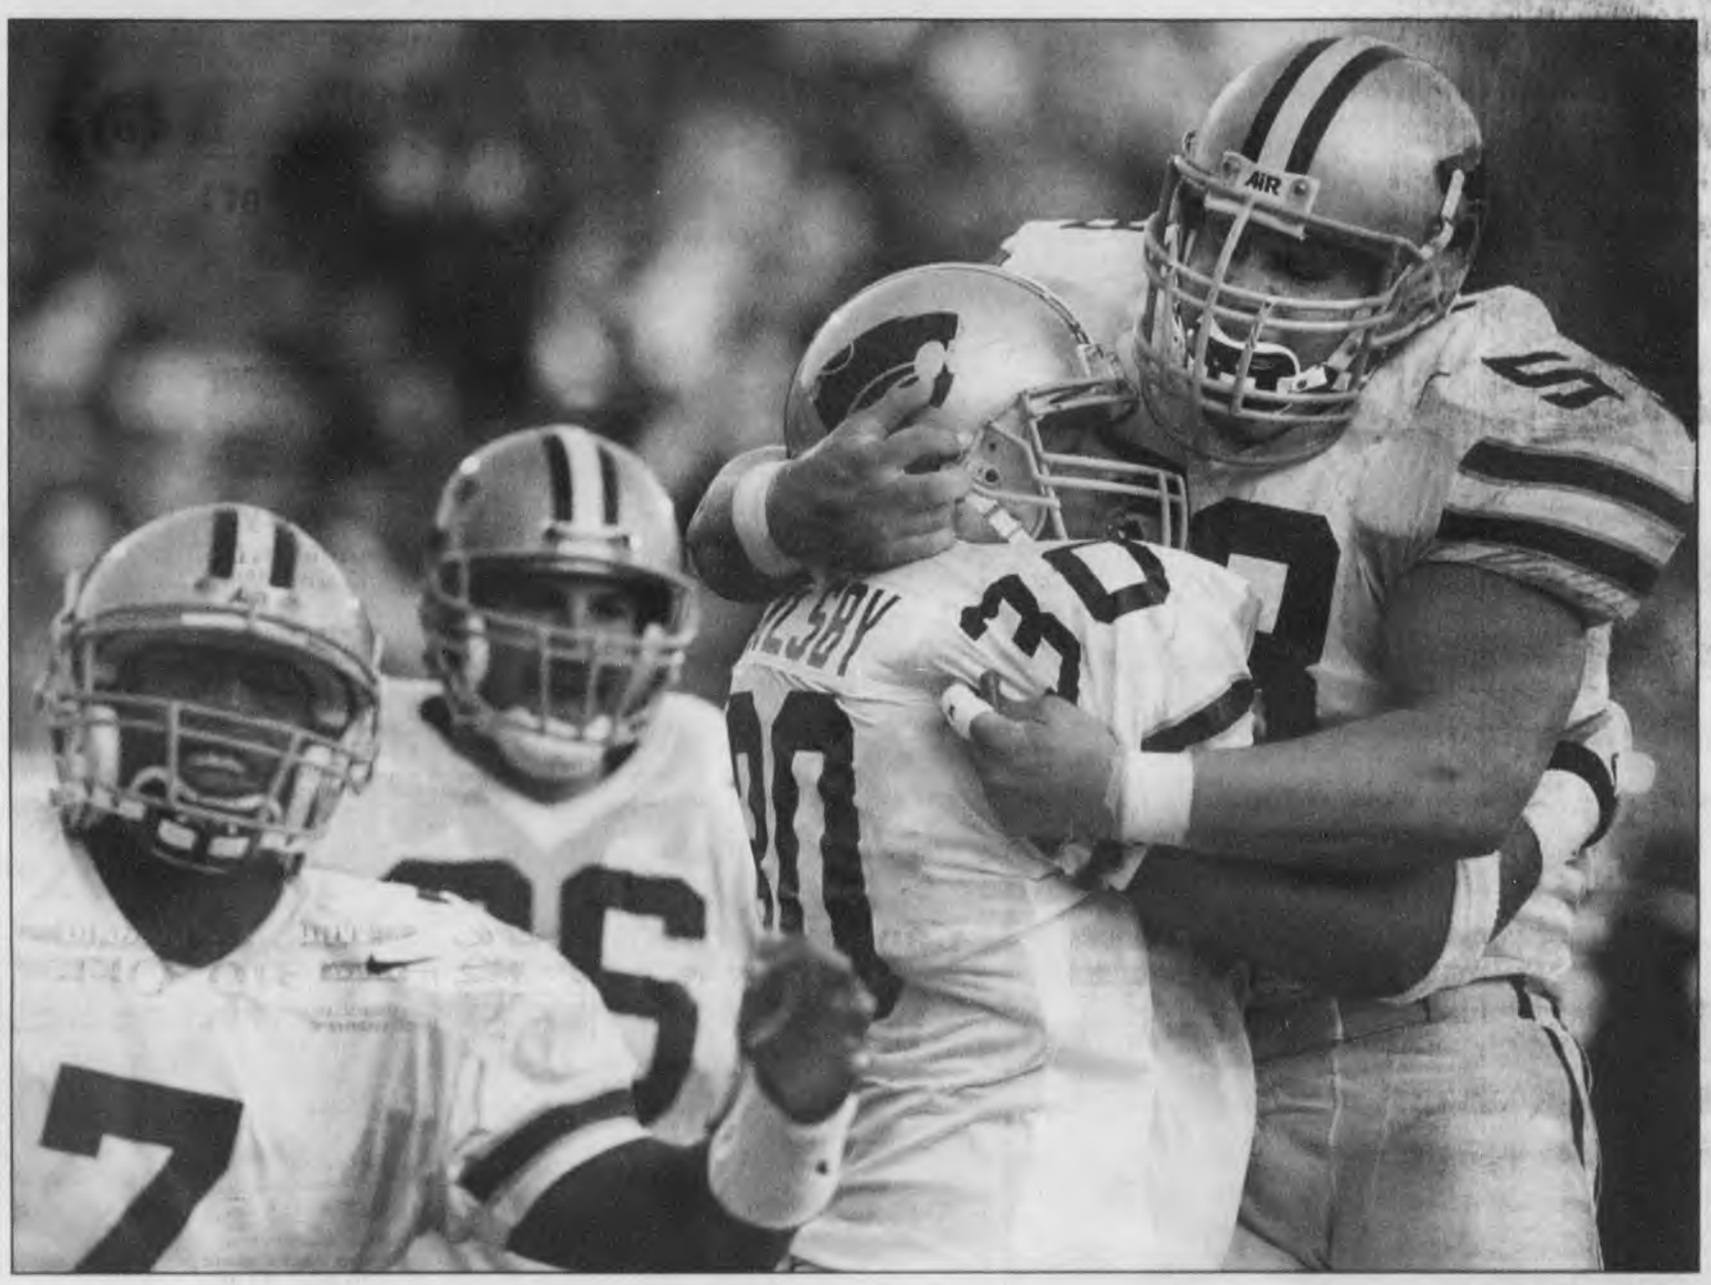
"They've got some pretty good middle (blockers)," Wildcat coach Jim McLaughlin said.

"If they get it to their middles, they can be dangerous. Our job is to slow down their quick attack."

Texas Tech is led by senior Lisa Hilgers, who broke the Texas Tech career digs record last weekend — and that's not all she does.

The Red Raiders' setter averages 13 assists per game and went over 5,000 for her career in a match against Missouri earlier this season.

"She's one of the best setters in the conference," McLaughlin said. "She's going to move the ball around and read what we're doing defensively."



K-State is 10-5 heading into the weekend, including a 4-2 conference mark.

McLaughlin said the Cats are hoping to get big crowds out to Ahearn Field House this weekend.

"In this conference, you've got to win at home," McLaughlin said. "We want teams to come in and fear playing us here."

Both matches will start at 7 p.m. Saturday night's match against Texas Tech can be heard on KSDB-FM 91.9.

MCLAUGHLIN

K-State's Brian Goolsby celebrates a touchdown with Randall Cummins after Goolsby scored on a run during the second quarter of K-State's game against Colorado on Saturday. K-State defeated the Buffaloes, 16-9.

BACK AT HOME

Wildcats return to the friendly confines of KSU Stadium after squeaking out a 16-9 win at Colorado

For the sixth-straight game, K-State appears, on paper, to be poised for an easy win in its football game. This time, it's Oklahoma State.

For the sixth-straight week, K-State coach Bill Snyder is worried, even though his Wildcats are favored heavily.

Concern No. 1: When the Cats have the ball.

"They (the Cowboys) play well defensively, they've been very successful defensively against the run as well as the pass. The numbers are great against the run, and they're awfully good against the pass," Snyder said.

Oklahoma State, giving up an average of 26.8 points, is allowing only 280.6 yards a game — 104.2 on the ground and 176.4 through the air. The Cowboys defense is led by junior linebacker Kenyatta Wright, who has 39 tackles, including seven for losses and four sacks.

The Cats will counter with the No. 1 scoring offense in the nation.

Concern No. 2: When the Cowboys have the ball.

"This is a very well-balanced football team," Snyder said. "They've run the ball a lot more than they've thrown it, but by the same token, they're very capable.

"I've looked at a lot of their ballgames from last year, and they were very successful throwing it in a lot of different ways."

Offensively, Oklahoma State is led by sophomore Tony Lindsay, who was recruited by K-State coming out of Thomas Jefferson High School in Denver. Lindsay, a mobile quarterback in the Michael Bishop mold, accounts for a team-high 151.4 yards a game of total offense.

"I always thought he was a tremendous talent. I still believe that that's the case," Snyder said.

Still, the Cats enter the game with the No. 1 scoring defense in the nation.

Concern No. 3: Playing No. 3 K-State in Manhattan might not be a problem for the Cowboys.

Through five games, Oklahoma State has played at home only once, a 42-23 win over Mississippi State. The Cowboys' fourth game of the season, against Nebraska, originally was scheduled as a home date but was moved to Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City, Mo., for financial reasons.

In that game, Oklahoma State was one yard short of forcing an overtime against the Cornhuskers.

"I expect a well-seasoned travel team to be here. They've had enough experience at it because of the way their schedule has worked out," Snyder said.

"I would think that being on the road against us probably is not going to be a big deal to them."

A win by the Cats will be their 44th straight at home over non-ranked teams and would be the 14th consecutive for the team overall — a new school record if accomplished. K-State hasn't lost to a school at home other than Nebraska or Colorado since 1989.

Concern No. 4: The Cats are now the top-ranked team in the Big 12 Conference. Every opponent likely will be gunning for K-State.

"I think they (K-State players) probably are under the assumption that any football team that comes in here, that their players are gonna play hard and any place we go to play, that their players are gonna play hard. We certainly are gonna draw to their attention," Snyder said.

That could be better than the alternatives, though.

"I'd rather be the team that people are shooting for than be the team that's shooting," K-State defensive end Joe Bob Clements said.

On the other hand, though, Oklahoma State coach Bob Simmons said he has only one concern coming into Manhattan on Saturday.

"The whole team. They are a darn good football team," he said.

Yankees fans crowd City Hall for pep rally

BY VERENA DOBNIK
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Fans at a City Hall pep rally for the New York Yankees paid tribute to ailing outfielder Darryl Strawberry while boosters in the Bronx — including some who had slept outside all night — learned whether they'd won a chance to buy World Series tickets.

The overflow crowds in both venues were evidence of the mania surrounding a team that won 114 games during the regular season, more than any team in American League history.

Perhaps sensing the expectations of fans were leaving no room for the vagaries of chance that affect sports, pitcher David Wells warned fans at City Hall to be content.

The San Diego native said his two seasons in New York, which included a rare perfect game this May against the Minnesota Twins, were the best years of his life.

"No matter what goes on, just be proud of what we did this year," said Wells, who is scheduled to pitch the Series opener.

Wells and fellow pitcher David Cone stood smiling on a podium, flinging baseball caps to several thousand fans who shared a strawberry cheesecake that honored Strawberry, the Yankees left fielder who is recovering from colon cancer surgery.

More anxious was the mood outside Yankee Stadium, where fans from the well-heeled to the homeless hoped to get a numbered wristband allowing them to line up for a maximum of two tickets.

The wristband system was an effort to avoid the chaos that occurred at Yankee Stadium two years ago, when fans trying to buy World Series tickets created a near-riot.

The supply of 5,000 bands ran out at about 11 a.m., leaving hundreds of fans disappointed after they had spent the night outdoors, sleeping inside 60 corrals created by blue police barricades.

Then came another hurdle. At 12:30 p.m., a public announcement rang out — wristband No. 7,427 would be first in line.

The crowd roared with enthusiasm, followed by panic and confusion. Some weren't sure whether their number, handed out earlier on a random basis, would guarantee them tickets.

Ticket sales would start with No. 7,427 and go up to 10,000, then continue with 5,000 and up.

Bleary-eyed fans draped in blankets dragged lawn chairs behind them as they got ready to go back to the police pens — this time marked with cardboard signs indicating wristband numbers.

"I spent the night here, it was like a pig pen, like being in jail," Kevin O'Keefe, 21, said.

Cats might make it to tournament this year, after being left home for last 2 dances

VIEWPOINT
JOHN BERGGREN

Several intriguing stories have come across the sports desk at the Collegian and area newspapers this week. At least they're intriguing to me, anyway.

There's the whole Michael Bishop thing, being put off limits to the news media after being misquoted by the Colorado press last week. There also have been several stories concerning the first two weeks of the NBA basketball season being canceled by its owners, who can't reach any kind of agreement with their players over a salary cap.

Maybe the most read stories to come out of the area this week have been about K-State basketball. Yes, it's nearly that time of the year again, and Coach Tom Asbury had his annual media day on Tuesday for all the reporters to poke and prod at what might be in store for the 1998-99 season.

There seems to be something different about the dawn of this basketball season for K-State fans at least. There seems to be an added bit of hope and maybe even some confidence that the Wildcats can return to the edge of the national spotlight for the first time since 1996. In case you've forgotten, that's the last time K-State made the NCAA Tournament.

It's a feat Asbury and his team have set as their goal each of the last three years but have fallen short of. For sure, making the trip to the Big Dance will be K-State's ultimate goal this season, but this time it seems like that goal could be easier to attain.

K-State returns six seniors to its squad this season in Shawn Rhodes, Ayome May, Ty Sims, Chris Griffin, Jay Heidrick and Manny Dies. Of those six players, Rhodes, May, Sims and Dies are overdue to have break-out years.

Dies showed glimpses of greatness last season and wound up being K-State's leading scorer, averaging 15.7 points a game, and rebounder (7.6). His play earned him second-team all-Big 12 Conference honors after his junior season and will most likely put him on the preseason all-Big 12 first team when it is released at the end of the month. One has to believe he will become a force on the floor this year in a league that thrives on post play.

Also joining the Wildcats this season are a pair of community-college transfers in Cortez Groves and Tony Kitt. Groves, a 6-foot-5-inch guard, comes to K-State by way of Moberly Community College after averaging 11.7 points a game and 3.2 rebounds while struggling through groin and ankle injuries as a sophomore. Kitt is a forward from Colby Community College and averaged 20.8 points a game and 10.2 rebounds, along with 3.5 blocks.

There are other things that have to give K-State fans a bigger glimmer of hope this season. The fact that there is no clear-cut powerhouse in the Big 12 entering the season means that anything can happen. For the first time in what seems like a decade, Kansas will not roll through the league, whipping everything in its path (except Missouri, of course).

The Wildcats have to believe they can knock off the Jayhawks for the first time since 1994, with Raef LaFrentz and Paul Pierce both in the NBA. Kansas' only proven returner is Ryan Robertson, whom, unless he has perfected a half-court shot in the off-season, should be able to be shut down easily. Yes, the Jayhawks are ripe for the picking this year.

K-State also established a home-court presence last season for the first time in Bramlage Coliseum history, which is comforting. The Wildcats finished 12-2 at home after winning 12 straight to open the season before falling to Kansas and Oklahoma State to end the home schedule.

The fact that 4,700 student season tickets already have been sold via the football season-ticket scandal should help K-State at home.

At least every now and then students will feel enough guilt not to let their basketball tickets waste away, even though many bought them solely for football.

Yes, for the first time in a while there is a bit of excitement in the air for K-State basketball. This season, that excitement could linger.

Clinton says peace agreement requires compromise, some risk

■ Israeli, Palestinian leaders attended Mideast summit talks on Thursday.

By BARRY SCHWEID
The Associated Press

QUEENSTOWN, Md. — President Clinton opened Mideast summit talks Thursday, telling Israeli and Palestinian leaders a peace agreement requires compromise and some risk. "There is hard work ahead," he said.

With West Bank security as the key, a U.S. plan aimed at uprooting terrorists took center stage as Clinton launched the discussions with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat and Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu at the White House and then resumed them at a secluded retreat on Maryland's Eastern Shore.

"All of us are determined to keep our energies focused on the talks," Clinton said as he sat down with the two leaders and their senior aides in a building off the Wye River.

Before asking reporters to leave, Clinton told Netanyahu and Arafat, who have a large stake in the outcome of the summit, "I suppose there always is a risk for anyone in an enterprise like this."

Earlier, at the White House, Clinton called for "a genuine Israeli-Palestinian partnership that will stand the test of time." He urged both leaders to take the long view as they started negotiations.

"As in any difficult problem, neither side can expect to win 100 percent of every point," he said in the White House Rose Garden.

"But concessions that seem hard now will seem far less important in the light of an accord that moves Israelis and Palestinians closer to lasting peace."

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright told The Associated Press, meanwhile, that "there has to be a 100-percent effort on terrorism issues," and she said whatever security measures Arafat agrees to undertake must be verifiable.

The American strategy, at least at the outset, was to put an emphasis on reciprocal anti-terrorism moves by Arafat's Palestinian Authority to match a virtual agreement with Netanyahu to pull back from a further 13 percent of the West Bank.

Except for a nature preserve, the land would be turned over to Arafat to add to the 27 percent of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, already promised to him under earlier accords.

Albright called it a land-for-security deal, thereby placing new emphasis on security instead of using the traditional label of land for peace.

Netanyahu said he cannot give up land, which is tangible, in exchange for promises alone.

"We come with the best intentions, and we hope that there will be an accord," Netanyahu told reporters at the White House.

"We're asked to give additional territory. We want to ensure that this territory doesn't become a base and a haven for terrorists to attack us as has happened before."

Arafat, in a brief exchange with reporters, said he was optimistic an accord could be reached during the weekend retreat.

When asked whether he could guarantee security in the region, he said, "I can give 100-percent effort, but no one in the world can give 100-percent results."

Later, Hassan Abdul Rahman, the Palestine Liberation Organization's representative in the United States, said Netanyahu should "exert the same efforts against extremists who are committing crimes against Palestinian people and settlers who shoot and kill Palestinian people."

In an APTV interview, Rahman said, "Everybody knows the ball is in the Israeli court. Mr. Netanyahu can make these talks or break them."

The summit, which is scheduled to continue through Sunday but could be extended, is a last-ditch effort by the Clinton administration to end a 19-month stalemate in peacemaking between Israel and the Palestinians.

State Board of Regents to tell position on higher education early next month

■ Committee to decide on 12 issues relating to Kansas higher education.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EMPORIA, Kan. — Early next month, the Kansas Board of Regents will present its position on higher-education restructuring to the Governor's Task Force on Higher Education Structure for Excellence.

On Thursday, Regents Chairman Bill Docking named himself, Regent Harry Craig of Topeka and K-State President Jon Wefald to a committee that will develop the regents' formal position on a dozen issues relating to changing Kansas' higher-education system to bring about greater coordination.

Next week, the committee will begin formulating the regents' position, and Wefald and Regent Ken Havner of Hays will take them to the governor's task force, whose next meeting is Nov. 5 in Topeka.

Wefald and Havner are members of the governor's task force.

Docking, of Arkansas City, led a 2-1/2-hour discussion of higher-education reform at the regents' monthly meeting here Thursday.

Havner reported on activities of the governors' task force and a dialogue between task-force members and the Legislative Educational Planning Committee on Wednesday.

The regents gave thorough airing to a proposal presented to the governor's task force last month by the 26 university and community college presidents.

The presidents' plan envisions the creation of a state higher-education coordinating agency that would not supplant the existing Board of Regents or Board of Education.

It would be charged with 11 responsibilities, including developing a coordinated budget for all post-secondary institutions to present to the governor and Legislature, exploring opportunities for mergers and affiliations among existing institutions, and serving as a referee to resolve disputes among the schools.

During its discussion Thursday, the board focused on three main areas of concern with the presidents' plan: dispute resolution, master planning and development of institutional missions.

During Wednesday's discussion with the LEPC, Havner also cited the unified budget and mergers-affiliations proposals as areas of concern.

In other business Thursday, the regents:

—Delayed until its Nov. 19 meeting a vote on approval of the board's intellectual-property policy. A policy statement was brought to the board last April and given first reading in May but has undergone several revisions. University heads said because of substantial revisions in the latest version, they want another month to study it.

—Endorsed five fiscal-year-2000 budget priorities for the six universities the regents supervise: maintaining base budgets, increasing such non-enhancement budget items as servicing new buildings, increasing current services budgets, enhancing salaries and operating expenses, and enhancing specific projects at individual campuses.

—Received the official fall 1998 enrollment figures at the universities, showing the regents system had 80,361 students in headcount, which translated to 64,864 full-time equivalent students. That is an 0.8-percent increase in both headcount and FTE from fall 1997.

SENATE

trying to purchase tickets with four IDs," Luke Spellmeier, class member, said.

Along with this idea is a proposal to have a five-digit reference number in the line schedule to purchase either football or combo tickets. Students will put the reference number on their enrollment sheet and will retain their class schedule as a receipt when they come to pick them up in the fall. Seniors would pick their tickets up on a Friday, juniors on Saturday and sophomores and freshmen on Sunday.

"This will cut down on the lines because it won't be on a first-come, first-serve basis," Chris Cox, class member, said.

All extra tickets that are not picked up will be put in a pool and sold the following Monday on a first-come, first-serve basis. Students who also want to purchase ICAT seating will have to purchase football tickets before they will be able to purchase ICAT.

Senate interns also offered two basic proposals for the ticket situation.

One would allow specified buyers to receive their tickets by certified mail. It would cost $3.25 to have the tickets sent by certified mail, which would be added on to the total ticket price.

The second proposal would be structured so seniors have priority on football tickets, but all students would have a shot for combo tickets.

The tickets would not be available on a Friday pick-up date in the fall. Instead, they would be available on a Saturday and Sunday to avoid long lines and prevent students from skipping their classes to stand in those lines.

Naomi McHugh, Senate intern, said she liked the idea of having the pick-up date fall on Saturday and Sunday, because students shouldn't have to skip class in order to receive season tickets.

"We are paying for college, and we should get our money's worth," she said.

McHugh also said she had talked previously to six or seven freshmen about the issue of seniority.

"They felt it was fair to be done by seniority, because it was a tradition that would be carried onto them," McHugh said.

However, Wesley Blue, Cabinet member, said he thought it might cause damage in the future if freshman were not allowed to participate in the football season because of lack of tickets.

Raising the price of season football tickets was not a consideration by either SGA or the discussions-method class.

"There was no consideration to increase the price. I think there would be an uproar if they did that," Jared Rose, Senate intern, said.

The group will meet again to finalize the decision concerning the tickets.

In other business, Senate passed a bill that allocated funds to the Individuals for Freethought group on a vote of 35-14-2. The group will receive money for the purpose of religious debate and member recruitment.

The Student Activity Fee also was voted on. Senate passed it as a continuance on a vote of 51-0.

Proposed allocations to Chi Alpha, the Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society, KSU American Civil Liberties Union, National United Law Enforcement Officers of America and the Project Management Student Chapter were held for referral.

ART

"(Students) come in knowing nothing about art and leave saying 'Hey, we can do this,'" Andrus said.

This visit to the elementary school was the only one in Andrus' curriculum, and her students said they enjoyed it.

Amanda Wilkins, junior in elementary education, said she enjoys seeing the creations of the students.

"It is really interesting to see how their imaginations work," Wilkins said. "You can see that their imaginations all work differently."

Students said they believe the experience benefits both the elementary and college students.

"It is good for kids to see a role model, and I enjoy being a role model," said Gary Anderson, sophomore in pre-professional elementary education.

Healthy choices found in the Little Apple

BY ERIN MCGLINN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The search is on for health foods like never before. Manhattan's area restaurants are serving up a variety of entrees they promise will please any health nut.

New York BagelCafé said it offers a nutritious alternative in honor of the K-State Wildcats. The Wildcat Club consists of turkey, roast beef, lettuce, tomato, light mayonnaise and American cheese.

"All of our bagels have less than 4 grams of fat, all the meat is at least 97-percent fat free, and all of the dressings are low fat," Andrew Reef, N.Y. Bagel employee, said.

Applebee's Grill & Bar has designated low-fat sections on its menu.

Applebee's manager Joe Armstrong said he recommends the Garlic Chicken Pasta, which he said has less than 10 grams of fat per serving.

When only a Mexican entree will do, Carlos O'Kelly's Mexican Cafe offers a Fajita Chicken Enchilada for customers trying to find a healthy selection.

Tim Anderson, manager, described this dinner as healthy because it is made with light sour cream, light cheese and a fat-free tortilla.

The oldest restaurant in Manhattan, Hibachi Hut offers a new menu item to satisfy the healthy eater.

John Heritage, manager and owner, said the Black Bean Chili is making its debut with a bang. The vegetarian-style chili is high in protein and low on fat, creating what he called an agreeable medium.

With a name like Juice Stop, one could imagine nothing but nutrition. Juice Stop lives up to its healthy reputation with the Wheat Grass Shot.

"The shot contains 30 vitamins and minerals, helps cure chronic fatigue and sore throat, is a complete protein, and contains chlorophyll, which is a detoxifying agent to help rid the body of infections," Juice Stop employee Shawna Ranabarter said.

Taco Bell, a popular choice for K-State students, offers customers the Grilled Chicken Soft Taco. With 200 calories, 7 grams of fat (2.5 saturated), 14 grams of protein and 540 milligrams of sodium, it seems to be the most beneficial choice on the menu.

Employee Nicole Alaniza advised health-conscious customers to steer clear of the Taco Salad, which contains a whopping 52 grams of fat.

A Big Mac attack at McDonald's is another entree to avoid as far as healthy eating goes. A healthy alternative to the Big Mac is the Grilled Chicken Deluxe, which, without mayonnaise, contains 300 calories, 5 grams of fat, 27 grams of protein and 930 milligrams of sodium, which is 39 percent of the recommended daily value.

McDonald's manager Angel Silya said mayonnaise adds an additional 15 grams of fat and 140 calories.

Burger King also offers a lighter chicken sandwich.

Burger King manager Jenny Schneider said the BK Broiler has 370 calories, 9 grams of fat (5 saturated), 29 grams of protein and 1,400 milligrams of sodium.

Subway advertises nutritional information for its menu items on its cups and napkins. The six-inch Turkey Breast sub contains 289 calories, 4 grams of fat, 18 grams of protein and 1,403 milligrams of sodium. Subway employee Matt Bargabus said he recommends the six-inch Veggie Delight sub as the most nutritious option, with 237 calories, 3 grams of fat, 9 grams of protein and 593 milligrams of sodium.

Many people said they feel they are eating healthier when they include chicken and turkey in their diets.

Kerri O'Toole, sophomore in business administration, said she often chooses chicken and turkey for her health.

"The light, white meats are lean and contain lots of protein for energy," she said.

O'Toole said she also tries to incorporate many vegetables in her meals to ensure a well-balanced diet with fewer calories.

Jane Freyenburger, registered dietician, said people can overlook certain issues when dieting.

"A major problem associated with dieting is people often restrict themselves. Nutrients are omitted in this way," she said.

Freyenburger said she advises people to try and follow the food pyramid whenever possible. She said daily meals should include two to three proteins, two to three dairy products, three vegetables, three fruits, six carbohydrates, two fats and water.

"A good meal focuses on variety, balance and moderation," she said.

Freyenburger also said choosing healthy, nutritious food alternatives takes planning and decision making, but that choices should not be based upon calories alone. Balance and variety of all vital nutrients are good guidelines to follow while eating wisely, she said.

Various art forms to be featured in craftmen's exhibit at museum

BY AMY MILLER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Members of the Kansas Artist Craftsmen Association will be featured in an exhibition at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. The juried exhibition opens today and runs through Jan. 3.

Curator Bill North said baskets, ceramics, jewelry and textiles are all considered crafts.

"Traditionally we think of things that have some sort of utilitarian origin as opposed to an oil painting," he said. "In recent years, the status of crafts has been elevated, and we've worked through the whole problem of 'Is it art? Does it go in a museum?' We agree that it's every bit as valid as more traditional art."

North said visitors to the arts-and-crafts exhibition might discover art goes beyond the walls of a museum.

"I think, for most people, they're not real sensitive to the design and manufacture of everyday objects, like dishes and coffee mugs," he said. "I think people could come away with a new appreciation for design."

Members were allowed to send slides of three works to juror Wendell Castle, a native Kansan who is now an artist-in-residence at the School of American Crafts at the Rochester (N.Y.) Institute of Technology. North said Castle chose selected pieces based on the slides and the dimensions of the Hempler and Vanier galleries, where they will be displayed.

Elliott Pujol, professor of art, was among four K-State faculty members whose works were chosen. Castle selected Pujol's three-footed copper sculpture "Let's Dance."

Pujol said he chose to submit slides that spoke about his abilities as an artist.

"I like to send three slides of work that represent what I'm doing at that particular time," he said, "so the juror can see the depth of the artist."

North said the exhibition, which will be shown at the museum biennially, is in line with the museum's goals.

"A major part of our mission is to look at artistic reproduction within the state," he said. "We really want the museum to become the premier center for the study of Kansas art."

He said autumn seemed to be an ideal time for the exhibition's opening.

"We wanted to have it up at a time that would work for students, so students could take advantage of it," he said. "You don't want to open it real late in the semester, when everyone's frazzled."

The Beach museum is open from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Tuesday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. Thursday, and 1 to 4:30 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. Admission to the museum is free.

"Basquiat"

Movie detailing modern artist's short life to be shown at Union

BY KELLY LYNN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Basquiat," a film profiling the life of African-American modern artist Jean Michel Basquiat, will be shown at 7 and 9:30 tonight and Saturday night in Forum Hall.

"Basquiat" tells the story of the artist's life, beginning with his experiences in New York's Thomkins Square Park, where he slept in a cardboard box. Basquiat began his painting career by putting graffiti on the walls of New York and eventually advanced to his esteemed status as a modern artist. Basquiat died in 1988 at the age of 27.

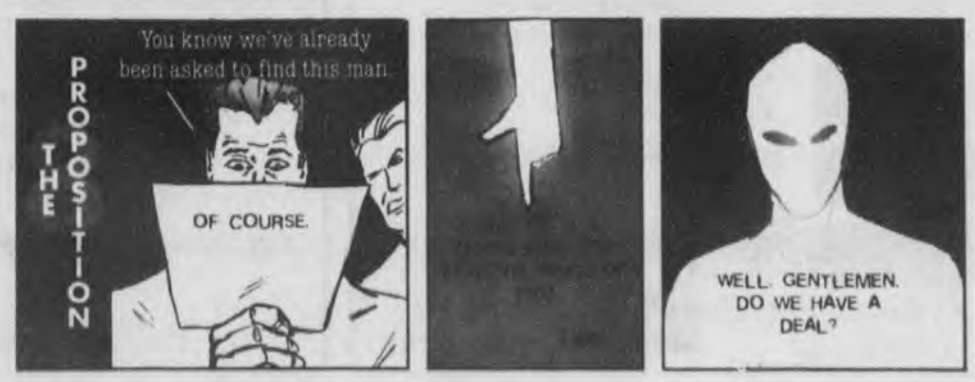
Union Program Council program adviser Paul Donovan said the film is particularly interesting because so many amazing things happened to Basquiat in his short life.

"It's fascinating to watch his brief, but brilliant artistic career," Donovan said.

Tim Yeaglin, UPC Feature Films chair, said the film fits the bill of a Kaleidoscope film because of its individual, non-mainstream nature.

The film also was chosen because it is a respected film, Misty Kelley, UPC program adviser, said.

"It was chosen based on its reputation, and because we could do a co-sponsorship with another UPC committee," she said.



UPC's Kaleidoscope Films Committee and the Arts Committee will sponsor the showing.

KSU business college accredited for quality standards

Faculty, department heads submit report; board voices concerns

BY DESIREE LAMBERSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Only 25 percent of business administration colleges have received the honor of being accredited, and K-State is one of them.

"I think that it is wonderful to see a program be accredited, because there is quite a difference between accredited and non-accredited schools," said Yar Ebadi, dean of the College of Business Administration.

Accreditation means the college demonstrates high standards of quality in many areas, such as curriculum, students and faculty. In order to be deemed accredited, the college must earn the approval of the International Association for Management Education, the premier accrediting body of bachelor's, master's and doctoral degrees in business.

Although the college was accredited in 1973, it must undergo an evaluation every 10 years to ensure it still is meeting the high standards set by the AACSB.

According to AACSB business standards, "Accreditation focused on the quality of educational activities. Standards set demanding but realistic thresholds, challenge schools to pursue continuous improvement and provide guidance for improvement in educational programs."

In order to maintain accreditation for this year, the college had to submit a self-study report to the AACSB. Faculty, department heads and Ebadi worked to create the report, which was submitted in June.

A committee consisting of deans, senior faculty members from other colleges and a business executive appointed by the AACSB then reviewed the report and raised questions or concerns that needed to be addressed before a reaccreditation body came to visit the college firsthand.

"These people had the opportunity to study our self-study report and then react to it," Ebadi said. "They submitted several questions to us before they came here, and we responded to those questions with very detailed information."

Ebadi said the committee was concerned particularly with the number of faculty members and the budget size. Due to an increase in enrollment — an additional 500 students in the past three years — the college needed more faculty and a larger budget to maintain the program quality.

"They wanted to see additional faculty positions and also additional budget in order to maintain the quality of our program," he said.

Ebadi said university president Jon Wefald and Provost Jim Coffman agreed to help.

After addressing the concerns, the committee then visited the college Oct. 4-7 and interviewed students, as well as Wefald and Coffman. They also interacted with Ebadi's Business Advisory Council, which consists of 44 business executives from various companies.

On the last day of its visit it recommended the college be reaccredited.

"They were very, very pleased," Ebadi said. "They were highly complementary about our students, our faculty commitment to teaching and research and about our facilities."

Ebadi said at this stage it is only recommended that the college be reaccredited, and a formal announcement will be made in December.

K-State, Wichita State University and the University of Kansas are the only colleges in Kansas to have an accredited business program.

Ebadi said so few schools are accredited because of the high standards and quality set by the AACSB.

"It's a very rigorous and difficult process. There is a lot of work involved," he said. "The standards of the AACSB are very strict."

In addition to the business program being reaccredited, the accounting program is reaccredited separately.

Only about 130 schools have accounting programs that are accredited separately.

"That really puts us among a very selective group of accounting programs," Ebadi said.

Jennifer Kaufman, sophomore in business, said she was proud to be a part of a program that adheres to such strict standards.

"It makes me feel like I'm getting a quality education," Kaufman said. "I like knowing that the administrators and the faculty have taken the extra time and put in the extra effort to produce such a high-quality program."

Ebadi said this is the first step in achieving his goal for the future — to make the business college the best in the region.

"This is a certification of quality," he said. "My vision is for the college of business to become the choice business school in the region."

K-State professor offers assistance in response to 4 hippo deaths in Paraguay ■ Medicine supplied by Sunset Zoo to help solve mysterious hippo deaths.

BY LYNETTE ABITZ
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A recent hippopotamus death concerned zoo officials in Paraguay, and a K-State professor came to the rescue.

The Asuncion Zoo of Paraguay called Sunset Zoological Park when four of its hippos, part of a new exhibit, fell ill. Ramiro Isaza, assistant professor of clinical sciences, traveled to Paraguay this week to treat the hippos with medicine supplied by Sunset Zoo.

Bob Klemm, vice president of the Kansas Paraguay Partners of America Group, said zoos in Paraguay contain both small and large animals but that the people there are not familiar with treating exotic animals.

Isaza's trip is just a small part of the relationship that Sunset Zoo and K-State have with Paraguay.

In 1992, the zoo received an invitation to join the group. At the time, Paraguayan officials wanted to refurbish the botanical gardens, a popular tourist attraction, Klemm said.

A K-State forestry student had been in Paraguay and brought a reporter to Manhattan to view its zoo. The reporter returned to Paraguay and advised officials to ask that Kansas zoo for help. This began the relationship that exists today.

Klemm said Sunset Zoo felt a common thread with Paraguay. Ten years earlier, the zoo had experienced a similar situation where improvements needed to be made in order for it to stay open.

"We felt we could put them in our bootstraps, and they could pull up," he said.

Sunset Zoo works with projects for the Natural Resources Paraguay group. Klemm said the zoo also has developed contacts with wildlife conservation groups within the country.

Friends of Sunset Zoo supports the projects in Paraguay, and no city funds are used, Klemm said The Asuncion Zoo also raises money. Two years ago, at the advice of Sunset officials, the zoo got children involved in the fund raising.

They saved their coins and raised enough money to build an elephant exhibit, Klemm said. "We were absolutely flabbergasted.

"They have made the zoo totally different with limited funds."

Although Sunset Zoo plays a large part in the partnership with Paraguay, K-State also gets involved.

"It's not just a zoo project. We're trying to get the university involved through research," Klemm said.

Gerald Zuercher, graduate student in biology, became interested in doing research in Paraguay after conversations with Klemm.

"I felt there was a huge need to get some information out about extremely interesting animals in extremely endangered habitat," he said.

Zuercher said he will be looking at the mammalian predator community with an emphasis on the bush dog. His research will be conducted in the Atlantic Forests of eastern Paraguay. These animals are losing a lot of their habitat, and hopefully the research will show which other animals make up the community and see how they relate to one another, he said. This will help Paraguayan officials understand the habitat before they decide to turn it into farmland.

"It's a small piece of the pie that we're looking at, but it's an important piece," Zuercher said. "It's an opportunity to hopefully make a difference."

As a result of Sunset Zoo's work in Paraguay, the organization has been asked to do projects in Bolivia and Guatemala.

Compliance key in Yugoslav pact

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — NATO signed a deal Thursday with the Yugoslav army, allowing spy planes to monitor the military's compliance in withdrawing troops from Kosovo so ethnic Albanian refugees can return to their villages.

Amid new accusations by Kosovo Albanians of Serb police intimidation, NATO chief Javier Solana said that, despite some progress, Yugoslav leader Slobodan Milosevic has a long way to go to meet NATO's Saturday deadline for compliance.

"I would send a very clear message" to Milosevic, Solana said before arriving in Belgrade on Thursday evening. "And that is that the solution to the problem is not signing papers but to comply with agreements that have been achieved."

The deal allows for unarmed spy planes to watch troop withdraws and the return of tens of thousands of ethnic Albanian refugees — demands spelled out in a breakthrough agreement reached earlier this week by Milosevic and U.S. envoy Richard Holbrooke.

International officials also met in Paris and Vienna on Thursday to advance the assessment process aimed at making sure Milosevic adheres to the agreement.

In Vienna, the 54-nation Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe formally agreed to oversee the 2,000-member "ground verification mission" — unarmed monitors who will roam through Kosovo to make sure terms of the agreement with Holbrooke are being honored.

The mission could cost about $200 million, with the United States, Britain, France, Russia, Italy and Germany assuming most of the burden, Poland's ambassador to the OSCE, Adam Kobieracki, said to the Austria Press Agency.

In Kosovo, the U.N. refugee agency delivered more aid to those displaced by the seven-month crackdown in the secessionist Serbian province, which is populated overwhelmingly by ethnic Albanians.

In Paris, the Balkans Contact Group of five leading Western nations and Russia fully endorsed the agreement on Kosovo but maintained its support for airstrikes if Milosevic fails to comply when a four-day grace period expires Saturday.

The Russians opposed a proposed new U.N. resolution specifically authorizing airstrikes, Germany's Foreign Minister Klaus Kinkel said.

In Vienna, diplomatic sources said the OSCE was not expected to finalize details of the verification mission until next week.

K-State organization wins national award recognizing excellence in community service

By JEFF SUTTON
Kansas State Collegian

The K-State Chapter of Associated General Contractors has been recognized as a national winner, with more national honors than any of the 150 student chapters across the country.

The organization earned the Outstanding Chapter of Community Service Award for the first time since 1992. It was presented at the Associated General Contractors of America national mid-year meeting in Charlotte, N.C., on Sept. 25.

"We had a lot of people help out to win this," said Aaron Townsend, president of AGC and senior in construction science and management. "It was very much a team effort."

In order to win the award, the chapter takes on special projects by donating labor for community organizations that provide materials.

"We do a lot of volunteer projects, as far as work for non-profit organizations," Townsend said. "People come to us because they can't afford to hire a contractor to do it."

Some projects the chapter has been involved with include building a handicapped ramp for a church, a tool shed for an elementary school and a greenhouse in Wamego.

They now are working on a monument and flagpole base for ROTC.

The projects give students first-hand experience in construction.

"We encourage a lot of the freshmen, sophomores and juniors to get out there and get hands-on," said David Fritchen, AGC faculty adviser and associate professor of construction science. "By virtue of being out there, they are getting experience."

Fritchen said the local chapter is supported by a statewide professional chapter that supplies scholarships and funding for trips, such as the national mid-year meeting.

"We couldn't have done it without the help of the Associated General Contractors of Kansas," he said.

Residence halls distribute free condoms

■ Regional AIDS Project sponsors displays at buildings' front desks.

By SUZANNE WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some K-State residence hall governing boards have made free condoms available at their buildings' front desks.

Other halls are discussing the possibility, but some residents are concerned that providing free contraceptives sends the wrong message.

The condoms, contained in fishbowls and sponsored by by the Regional AIDS Project, are available in residence halls that choose to display them.

Amber Dowlin, senior in elementary education and vice president of Ford Hall, said that although the condoms might be helpful to some students, offering them at the hall's front desk might be too conspicuous. Dowlin said the halls instead might consider putting the condoms in their restrooms.

Martin Ohmes, sophomore in mechanical engineering and president of Marlatt Hall, said that Marlatt had sold condoms at the front desk until this year. Having the condoms there now will not be a big change, he said. Residents already have voted to display the condoms.

"We feel that if it will help prevent AIDS for one person, it's worth it," Ohmes said.

Association of Residence Halls president Nick Lander said that the Regional AIDS Project presented the idea to KSUARH, who chose to leave the decision up to individual halls.

Eunice Dorst, executive director of Regional AIDS Project in Manhattan, said that people ages 18-29 have the fastest-growing number of HIV cases. She said that residence halls are a great target for the age group they are trying to reach.

"Our purpose is to prevent the spread of HIV," Dorst said. "If people make choices to be sexually active, we want them to be safe — and that means using a condom."

Dorst said that putting condoms in the halls' bathrooms concerns her. She said that some people might take advantage of the location and take too many of them. At the front desk, the condoms can be monitored.

Some community assistants — staff members who work behind hall front desks — are uncomfortable with the new display.

"There is nothing wrong with an AIDS awareness display but placing a container of free condoms along with this display is offensive, uncomfortable and controversial," said Ben Claar, junior in computer science and community assistant in the Strong Complex.

Claar said that he feels uncomfortable knowing which residents are taking condoms, because that is something personal that they might not want him to know.

Dorst said that using condoms isn't something

Homecoming week begins

By DESIREE LAMBERSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State fans, get ready to Ride the Tide of Purple Pride.

With activities planned every day this week, Homecoming officially kicks off today, featuring this year's theme, "Ride the Tide of Purple Pride."

"Homecoming is the only event that brings the whole university together," said Heather Lansdowne, chair of the All-University Homecoming Committee and assistant director of alumni programs at the KSU Alumni Association. "There are activities throughout the week for all students, faculty and fans."

The goal of Homecoming week is to get all students involved, Lansdowne said.

"We have activities every single day to involve the entire campus," she said. "That's been our goal the last two years."

Lansdowne said Homecoming is about more than the football game.

"Homecoming has been part of K-State for years and years," she said. "It is a great way for the community to see the things students are involved in and their successes."

HOMECOMING 1998
"Ride the Tide of Purple Pride"

Activities begin today at 8 a.m. with the hanging of spirit banners in the K-State Student Union Courtyard by groups participating in the Homecoming competition. Homecoming will begin officially at noon with the Kickoff Rally in the courtyard.

Melanie Tull, Union Program Council Special Events Committee chairwoman, said Student Body vice president Andy Macklin will be the emcee for the rally. Willie the Wildcat, part of the pep band and members of the cheerleading squad also will take part.

"It's going to be pretty colorful," Tull said. "It's a great way to get everyone excited about the week."

Candidates for K-State Ambassador will be introduced at the rally. The candidates, who were interviewed by a committee of students and faculty, are in the running to serve as students' representatives at alumni functions in the coming year. Tull said the kickoff will allow students to become more familiar with the candidates.

"Students get to see the ambassador candidates face-to-face," she said.

For residence halls, the Crazy Cat Kickoff will be at 6 p.m. at Weber Hall.

K-State basketball player Ayome May uses a motorized scooter to deliver T-shirts to people camping out at Ahearn Field House as part of the annual Basketball Camp Out Sunday afternoon. May acquired the scooter from Kevin Meyer, freshman in agricultural business and drove it around the sidewalks handing out the T-shirts. Around 100 basketball fans camped out Sunday night trying to get first dibs on basketball seating. This year's camp out allowed campers to watch the men's basketball team scrimmage and to participate in free-throw, three-point and slam dunk competitions. The competitions were judged by the men's basketball team members.

The 1998-99 K-State basketball season got off to a running start on Sunday with the annual Basketball Camp Out at Ahearn Field House.

About 100 Wildcat faithfuls set up tents, televisions and other camping accessories to get first dibs on basketball seating. The Student Athletic Ticket Sales Committee was in charge of organizing the event.

Committee member Edee Fisher, senior in accounting, said she was pleased with the camp out's organization.

"I think it's gone smoothly so far, but I would have liked to see more people here," she said. "This year, things are better organized, and the weather is beautiful."

Unlike past camp outs, this year's version was set up for only one day, but campers got the chance to watch the men's basketball team scrimmage and participate in free-throw and slam dunk contests, which were judged by the team members.

"I think it is better to have it for only one day, because it doesn't take you away from classes," Traci McCauley, senior in agricultural economics, said. "The contest was a good idea. There was more interaction between players and students."

Students camped out all night and will continue most of the day today when ICAT and general admission tickets are distributed. Several fraternities used the camp out for pledge purposes.

"It is just like a pledge event for us," Geoff Greenfield, freshman in business and Phi Gamma Delta member, said. "We do this every year, and it's a lot of fun just hangin' out."

After the scrimmage, the basketball program treated fans to free T-shirts, pizza and pop.

Head basketball coach Tom Asbury said he was happy with the turnout of the event.

"I think it's a great tradition," he said. "This is the first time we have actually had the players interact with the campers, and it is something we will continue to do. With 4,700 tickets already sold, the student support has been good already."

Student Athletic Ticket Sales Committee member Tonya Hoobler, senior in agribusiness, also was excited about the number of campers.

"We had a sufficient increase in the

Lafene offers flu shots for students, faculty

Lafene Health Center will be offering flu shots to K-State students, faculty and staff at two clinics in the next few weeks, director of nursing Cathy Barry said.

With each new year, a new flu vaccine is manufactured. The vaccine, which is 70- to 80-percent effective, is created from a strand of the virus that surfaced as the latest virus of the previous year.

"They try to get the most current virus, because they change year to year," Barry said.

The flu vaccine for 1998-99 was developed by several labs and contains strands from a virus that surfaced in Australia.

Barry said it is important for people who have chronic diseases, including respiratory problems, diabetes and asthma, to receive the flu shot because of complications that might arise, such as pneumonia.

Barry also encourages everyone else to receive the vaccine, because the flu affects all individuals. It can last for about seven days and causes inconvenience, Barry said.

Jaime Snitker, sophomore in business, received her flu shot at Lafene's first flu shot clinic last week. Snitker said she wanted the vaccination because of her surroundings and where she lives.

"I live in an organized-living arrangement, and I wanted to be well," she said.

The clinics are on a walk-in basis and are $7 for students and $10 for faculty and staff.

The two remaining clinics will be from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. and 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. on Nov. 5 and 12.

Though reports of a new nasal vaccine are being made, Barry said Lafene, as well as other health centers, will be offering only the vaccination in the form of an injection, because it is the only approved method.

Father of slain officer wants justices ousted

WICHITA — Rick Easter is staging a one-man battle against the Kansas Supreme Court justices who overturned the conviction of his son's confessed killer.

In a letter sent to 2,500 voters, politicians and reporters, Easter accused the justices of putting criminals before society and said it's time Kansans overturned them.

"We have a small group of people who decide a convicted criminal's rights are more important than a community's rights," Easter said. "Our family does not believe that is true."

Sedgwick County sheriff's deputy Kevin Easter was shot fatally Jan. 8, 1996, while chasing a teenage suspect. The boy, now 17, admitted pulling the trigger, was convicted of capital murder and began serving a 48-year sentence in the El Dorado Correctional Facility.

In May, the state Supreme Court justices ruled that the trial of Sakone Donesay was marred by the emotional testimony of Kevin Easter's wife, and they unanimously overturned the conviction. A new trial is set for Nov. 2.

"The truth is, there are decisions that these judges make that make no sense," said Rick Easter, a retired Wichita police officer. "This is one of them."

In the letter, Easter reminded voters that while Supreme Court justices and appeals court judges are appointed by the governor, their positions are not permanent.

Every six years, the names of the seven Supreme Court justices appear on the ballot. Every four years, the names of the 10 appeals court judges appear on the ballot.

The Supreme Court justices could not comment because Donesay's trial is pending, court spokesman Ron Keefover said.

He said Easter's public criticism of the justices is rare but not unheard of, but he was not aware of any justice ever being voted out of office.

"We would hope the voters would base their decision on more than one case," Keefover said.

In Donesay's case, the justices ruled that Sedgwick County District Attorney Nola Foulston should not have allowed Julie Easter to talk about the couple's first date or about kissing her husband goodbye the night he was shot.

The testimony was irrelevant and denied Donesay's right to a fair trial, the justices said.

Donesay had confessed to the crime, and the only issue to be decided was whether the killing was premeditated, they said.

Many Kansans are not aware they have a vote about whether justices stay on the bench, Easter said.

"People say, 'There is nothing we can do about it,'" he said. "Yeah, there is. They do have a choice."

Stanford fraternity banned after accident

STANFORD, Calif. — A fraternity on probation for alcohol-related problems at Stanford was banned from the campus after a student fell from a two-story balcony during a party that had alcohol.

Michael Howard, 21, fell from his Phi Delta Theta fraternity house early Saturday and landed on his face. The fall crushed the bones around his eye sockets and caused internal bleeding in his brain, said his father, Bruce Howard. He was hospitalized in good condition Friday.

After the fall, university President Gerhard Casper said Phi Delta Theta would lose its house on campus.

The house already had been on probation for problems with alcohol and had a record of problems, university officials said.

Jackson Wagener, Phi Delta Theta's campus president, said Howard's fraternity brothers have not been allowed to visit him in the hospital.

"We are just praying for him and hoping he gets better," Wagener said. "Right now, the house is not our concern. It's with our friend in the hospital."

BSU cleans 7 campus lots Sunday as part of Adopt-A-Lot program

By Lauren Posladek
Kansas State Collegian

More than 30 members of Black Student Union, armed with bright yellow vests and white trash bags, gathered in the K-State Student Union parking lot Sunday afternoon with one goal: to pick up trash.

BSU was the first student organization to participate in Adopt-A-Lot, a new program at K-State similar to the nationwide Adopt-A-Highway program. BSU cleaned seven campus lots on Sunday, though it is assigned only to the lot in front of the Union. John Lambert, director and associate professor of public safety, said he started the program because he wanted students to help clean up campus.

"The Adopt-A-Lot program is full of positive results," Lambert said. "Not only will it keep campus parking lots much cleaner, it will also create student involvement and pride for our campus."

BSU President Brandon Clark, junior in elementary education, said the group is committed to keeping its lot clean. He said BSU would meet as a group to clean three times this semester, but members would do their best to keep it clean as individuals between the sponsored times.

MORE INFO? Want to adopt a K-State parking lot? Call John Lambert at 532-5856 or Darwin Abbott at 532-7275.

"Any time a BSU member comes to the Union, he or she will try to pick up any trash they see," Clark said. "It's our parking lot and our duty is to keep it clean at all times."

Vice President Paris Rossiter, sophomore in general engineering, said he wanted other students to take pride in the campus.

"Basically, it's about campus awareness. We want to keep our campus clean, and we want others to care about it, too," he said.

Clark said he wanted to encourage other student organizations to get involved with the Adopt-A-Lot program.

Awareness, early detection key in preventing breast cancer deaths

By Desiree Lamberson
Kansas State Collegian

Every 11 minutes, another woman dies of breast cancer.

According to the University of Texas M.D. Anderson Cancer Center, approximately 44,000 women die each year of breast cancer with 184,000 new cases diagnosed each year. With the help of early detection and education, many women have fought this disease and won, which is why October is National Breast Cancer Awareness Month.

Although the disease mostly affects older women, Cathie Barry, director of nursing at Lafene Health Center, said young women still need to be aware. According to the National Cancer Institute, breast cancer is the most prevalent type of cancer and is the leading cause of cancer death in women ages 15-34.

"It isn't something that frequently strikes younger women, however, if you have any first-degree relatives, such as a mother or a sister, who had breast cancer at a young age, you should want to be more aware," Barry said.

Due to increased technology and knowledge, a woman now has better than a 90-percent chance of survival with early detection, and many women no longer lose a breast to the disease.

Jennifer Foltz, technical coordinator for the mammography program at Mercy Health Center on Sunset Avenue, said early detection is the key.

"Breast cancer is very curable, if it is found soon enough," she said. "A breast self-exam and a mammogram are the best ways of early detection."

A mammogram is a special form of X-ray that is capable of detecting a cancerous tumor up to two years before it can be felt.

Foltz said women should receive a mammogram once a year after the age of 40, but younger women should start doing breast self-exams now.

"You should do a breast self-exam every month, and your doctor should do a breast exam every two years," she said.

Barry agreed.

"It's important to learn how to do a self breast exam, because then you can get used to how your breasts feel and will be able to discover any abnormalities sooner," Barry said.

The breast self-exam takes approximately 10 minutes. Women should look for any changes such as lumps, thickening or a discharge.

"If you see any changes at all or feel a lump, the first thing you should do is call your doctor and have your doctor do an exam. From there, they would probably order a mammogram," she said.

Foltz said women also should remind others to do an exam.

"You should also encourage your mother and grandmother to do a breast exam, to make people more aware," she said.

Women with a family history of breast cancer or who are over the age of 50 have an increased risk of breast cancer. Barry said certain negative lifestyle patterns such as excessive alcohol drinking or smoking also can increase your risk for cancer.

However, Foltz said doing a self-exam and regularly scheduling mammograms will detect the disease in its early stages, making it more treatable.

As a part of National Breast Cancer Awareness Month, Lafene is distributing pink ribbons, the symbol of breast cancer awareness, for people to wear and has hung up informational posters. Lafene also has literature available on the disease and will answer any questions students have.

Anyone with questions is encouraged to call the Women's Clinic or the Health Education Department. Barry also said the clinic is teaching women how to do a self-exam properly.

"It's just one of those things you need to get into the habit of doing, like putting on your seatbelt when you get into a car," she said. "It's a wise thing to do."

OUR VIEW

Condom distribution will not corrupt us

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment has empowered the Regional AIDS Project with the funds to distribute free condoms on campus.

You should expect to begin seeing displays in certain residence halls — a sign promoting AIDS awareness next to a fishbowl filled with prophylactics and a community assistant sitting behind the front desk, charged with the responsibility of monitoring the bowl to make sure nobody takes advantage of the free service.

This somewhat innocuous picture, however, is stirring up a bit of controversy. Condoms already are available throughout campus — many of the same vending machines that dole out Doritos also sell packages of condoms for 70 cents apiece, Lafene Health Center sells condoms, and some residence halls have sold condoms at their front desks for years. The difference now is that the Regional AIDS Project has made condoms available for free.

The hope is that all of the hassle, embarrassment and planning involved in protected sex is diminished by making condoms free and more convenient. A fishbowl is not as personal as a receptionist working the counter at a drug store or Lafene; it isn't a vending machine where a line of people is waiting and watching.

An AIDS-awareness display and fishbowl full of condoms is an inanimate reminder every time you walk in or out of the front door that if you are having sex, you need protection.

There is concern that people who have remained abstinent thus far will be encouraged to have sex by these awareness programs — that, by some mysterious influence, they will be corrupted. But those who are committed to abstinence will not be swayed by a simple fishbowl full of condoms. If they have really made commitment, they can continue to resist the temptation. By the same token, if they do give in and have intercourse, at least they will be protected.

Abstinence, of course, is the best form of protection, but people are having sex, they are having one-nighters and they are participating in explicit sexual activities. Many people on this campus are carriers of some form of a sexually transmitted disease. Those who are participating in one-night stands are more likely to use condoms if they are available, and if availability prevents one person from getting a STD, the cost is worth it.

It is good that the residence halls are helping people to act responsibly by providing condoms.

Coordinator thanks donors to Red Cross Blood Drive

Editor,

On behalf of the American Red Cross, I would like to thank all of the volunteers who helped with this semester's American Red Cross blood drive.

We exceeded our goal by 160 units and are very appreciative of everyone's efforts to make this a great blood drive. Because of the dedication of donors and volunteers alike, we are able to continue providing a lifesaving gift to those who need it.

We would like to extend a special thanks to the following clubs and organizations for their ongoing support of the drive: the Manhattan Kiwanis Organization, Circle K, AED, the Pre-Physical Therapy Club, the Association of Residence Halls, Golden Key Honor Society, the Pre-Veterinary Medicine Club, Alpha Phi Omega, the Student Health Advisory Committee and Delta Tau Delta fraternity. These organizations worked hard to make this a great success. In addition, we would like to thank the Collegian for its coverage of the event, Parking Services for its support, Dr. Robert Poresky for getting his class involved, and finally, we would like to thank Kim Van Meter for all her work on our displays.

With all of the hard work these individuals and organizations put forth, we were able to accomplish our goal and WIN BACK THE TROPHY from that school up the road! But, of course, we could not have done it without the donors. To each one of you who donated, or attempted to donate, we say a sincere thank you for giving your time and blood! Your gift is deeply appreciated. Once again, we say thank you, and we hope to see you in the spring for our next drive.

Thank you for your help and support.

TRAGEDY SHOULDN'T BE ONLY WAY TO SPUR ACTION

It's time to make good on our word for 365 days a year

VIEWPOINT

CORBIN H. CRABLE

Here we go again.

Another hate crime occurs, and we're asking ourselves why. I, too, am asking myself why.

Why do we have to wait for another death to take action?

I'll be truthful — last week left me pooped and not only because of midterms. Like the rest of you, I was busy mourning the death of Matthew Shepard and hoping that finally, this would be the tragedy that would open the eyes of our community and cause action to be taken.

Tragedies such as the one that transpired last week act as the beginning of a cycle of which our society must break free: Someone is murdered, a community mourns and says how shocked it is that this has happened, and it vows to take the necessary steps to ensure something of this nature doesn't happen again.

This promise lingers above our heads for a while, until the period of mourning is over; the promise that was made is put in the backs of our minds.

Another murder occurs, and promises of attempting to battle these hate crimes are dusted off the shelves of our minds and brought to the front lines once again.

The cycle is fairly easy to recognize. What might be more difficult to do, however, is to live by your words and to take action before another homosexual or bisexual student — or any student, for that matter — must lose his or her life. But isn't it worth all of the hard work, in the end, knowing that you're contributing to the education on gay and bisexual issues and making the campus an overall safe place to be?

Too often, we become caught up in the cycle of promising to battle hate crimes, and too often, we fall short of our own expectations for ourselves. For a change, let's live up to our promises. The result will be a safer campus for everyone. I can't think of anyone who wouldn't welcome that idea.

"But Corbin, what can I do to help with the cause?" you might ask. The answer is quite simple. Allow me to outline it for you with two of my favorite words: "programming" and "awareness."

First of all, on the subject of programming, I applaud the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls for putting on its Gay Awareness Program, which took place on the 5th floor of Marlatt Hall on Tuesday. With programs such as this, students are brought out of their safety zone and educated about such issues. While I know that the aforementioned program specifically was designed for National Coming Out Day, I also know KSUARH is planning another Gay Awareness Program in the spring. With National Coming Out Day, the death of Shepard and the fact that there recently have been some problems in the residence halls concerning gay and bisexual issues, this program couldn't have come at a better time.

You, as a student, staff or faculty member, can support these programs, not just when the time is convenient or when a holiday dictates it, but year round. If there is a flow of programs that lasts throughout the year, it will lead to the next step you can take in ensuring a safe campus for gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered students; it will lead to awareness.

Awareness, then, is a direct result of programming. After being involved in these programs, you have the power to raise awareness anytime you want. Raising awareness could be something as easy as denouncing jokes or derogatory remarks against gays, lesbians or bisexuals when you hear them.

Too often, we become caught up in the cycle of promising to battle hate crimes, and too often, we fall short of our own expectations for ourselves. For a change, let's live up to our promises. The result will be a safer campus for everyone. I can't think of anyone who wouldn't welcome that idea.

Gay, lesbian and bisexual awareness shouldn't just be brought up when a death occurs or when it's a "special time," such as National Coming Out Day. By then, it could be too late, and another Matthew Shepard might have to pay the price for our silence.

People should avoid judging others, embrace learning

VIEWPOINT

MARY VANLEEUWEN

Empathy is the key to the future. Well, that's what I think, at least. You don't have to agree with my opinion, just try to see where I'm coming from and then try to respect it. You don't have to adopt my opinion that empathy is the key; I'd just like you to use empathy to accept my opinion on empathy.

Empathy is something I believe is quite lost in our society and in societies around the world. It is a lack of empathy that destroys cities, kills people and permanently scars survivors in countries filled with religious wars. It is a lack of empathy that has, in the past, led Jews and Christians; Muslims and Christians; and Protestants and Catholics to kill each other.

It is a lack of empathy that makes us look at tribal societies as heathenistic and has made us, as a country, strive to bring these societies into the modernized 20th century. It is a lack of empathy that makes people hate groups like Fred Phelps' following, the homosexual and bisexual population, feminists, the Promise Keepers, environmentalists, animal lovers, ranchers, Republicans, Democrats, the rich, the poor, stamp collectors, etc.

What do I think we're doing wrong? We're taking other's beliefs too personally. We're judging rather than learning and understanding. We're not respecting each other like we should.

I see the empathizing process as containing three basic steps. First, look at the issue at hand with an open mind. Separate your beliefs from the issue. Notice how it functions and what reasoning might be behind it. Forget about what it is compared to your beliefs, and just look at what it is.

Second, try to imagine how members of the group must feel. Try to understand why they are as adamant about their beliefs as you are about yours. Try to understand why membership in that group fulfills something deep within them.

The final step of the empathizing process at least involves accepting or tolerating the beliefs of the other group, and, if you're really gung-ho about the wonders of empathizing, it involves respecting the beliefs.

Empathizing doesn't mean you have to agree, and it doesn't mean you have to change your beliefs — it just means you accept the difference of opinions.

An ideal society would be one in which everyone empathizes more. In this society, we all wouldn't be acting like third graders. My sister, Autumn, is a third grader, and let me tell you, I really get a kick out of this developmental stage.

I'll use the example of a hypothetical little Billy and a pretend little Susan to drive my point that banter and fighting really gets a society nowhere. The time is any period in the last 1,500 years, give or take a century or two. The place is the playground of life.

Billy says to Susan, "Hey, Susan-Woozan, Mohammed is the final prophet."

Susan replies, "Nuh-uh, Smelly-Billy, Jesus is the final prophet."

Billy retorts, "Uh-huh, he is, and he's cooler than Jesus."

Susan shouts, "Whatever! Jesus is way cooler! He could totally beat up Mohammed."

The banter goes on and on.

In fighting with each other about what is right and what is wrong, the real issues often get lost, people get hurt, relationships are severed, hostility comes into play and one side never wins.

I'm getting pretty good at being able to keep my own views and still say to another opinion, "Yeah, I get what you're saying, and I respect that." My empathy skills still can use a little refining, however.

What about you? How are your empathy skills? If empathy allows you to keep your own views and opinions while learning to love and respect others, why not give it a try?

Government increases GI Bill by 20 percent

■ Benefits help military veterans of all branches attend college during service or after discharge.

By Elizabeth Schofield
Kansas State Collegian

The armed services just became a little more college-friendly.

As of Oct. 1, the GI Bill increased by 20 percent. This raise includes the benefits for those joining the military now and soldiers who have completed their military service in any branch.

The GI Bill — the monthly stipend for military veterans attending college — can be used for whatever students choose.

In order to receive the GI Bill, soldiers must contribute $100 dollars a month during their first year of active service. The government contributes the remaining amount.

Benefits from the GI Bill can be used whenever the soldier is enrolled in college. This can be either during active service in the military or within 10 years of an honorable discharge. The benefits continue for 36 months while the veteran is in school.

After four years in the Marine Corps, Jon King, a 22-year-old freshman in agricultural technology management, is beginning his college career with the help of the GI Bill.

Although he still has to work and use student loans, King said the money from the GI Bill helps.

"I wouldn't have been able to come here without it," he said.

King joined the Marines at 18 and began bootcamp training at Camp Pendelton, Calif., two weeks after high school graduation. King said his parents would have helped him pay for college right after high school, but he wasn't ready.

"It was the best decision I ever made in my life," King said. "It taught me discipline. It made me who I am today."

King's four years in the military were mostly spent overseas in Jordan and other countries in the Middle East. The time overseas was an enriching experience, King said.

"You have a better perspective of what the rest of the world is like, and you kind of appreciate things here more," he said.

The GI Bill isn't the only benefit the government has increased. A 1.6-percent raise in the monthly living allowance for students in the Vocational Rehabilitation Program has also been implemented.

Lorene Dahm, program consultant at the University Veteran's Association, said this applies to students who have a military service-related disability of 20 percent or more. The Veteran's Association pays for these students' tuition, fees, books and supplies and provides a monthly living allowance based on family size.

Viola Jones, a 51-year-old senior applying to the social work program, is using the program after 22 years of service in the Army.

"It helps me out tremendously," Jones said. "I have no out-of-pocket expenses."

Jones joined the military when she was 27. She was a single parent and her son was asthmatic.

"The reason I joined was twofold — to take care of my child and to gain skills," Jones said.

Jones retired from the military in December 1996 and began attending K-State in January 1997.

She had some previous college experience in her home state of Virginia at Norfolk University. She also attended Central Texas University while in the military.

"I wanted to have a degree to get that formal training," Jones said.

Jones said she hopes to pursue her master's degree after she gets her bachelor's at K-State.

According to the Kansas City Recruiting Battalion of the U.S. Army, the government may also increase the Army College Fund this year. The Army College Fund pays $26,500 for a two-year enlistment and $33,000 for a three-year enlistment.

The Army College Fund is for soldiers who enlist in qualifying specialty jobs and successfully complete their term of service.

To decide if joining the military before college is the right choice, King says some need it and some don't.

"It's a personal decision. If you know what you want in life and you know what direction your life is going, you probably don't need to join," King said.

Key elements stall Middle East peace process

■ Clinton meets with leaders separately, no indication given of all 3 meeting together.

By Barry Schweid
The Associated Press

QUEENSTOWN, Md. — Prodded by U.S. mediation at the highest levels, Middle East peace negotiations were stalled Sunday over key elements of a land-for-peace deal between Israel and the Palestinians.

Eager to nail down a deal, President Clinton and members of his administration worked well into the evening for a second-consecutive day and extended the difficult talks for at least one more day.

But a senior U.S. official, steering clear of any claims of progress or optimism, said he did not think the extension necessarily enhanced prospects for resolving some of the knotty issues.

"No," the official replied on condition of anonymity when asked whether the one-day extension was a signal that an agreement was near at hand.

Nonetheless, the administration appealed to the two sides to find the "political will" to settle issues that have generated 19 months of stalemate and extended the talks past Sunday's projected conclusion.

"It is in the best interest of the peace process and the discussions we have been having," State Department spokesman James P. Rubin said at nightfall Sunday in announcing that the Israeli and Palestinian delegations would remain overnight at the secluded summit retreat and that there "almost certainly" would be talks on Monday.

Separately, White House spokesman Joe Lockhart told a group of reporters that "talks almost certainly will go into tomorrow. We believe it's in the best interests of the peace process to continue the discussions."

Clinton, in a third day of personal intervention, met over lunch with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu for an hour and 45 minutes and then strolled along the Wye River.

In early evening, Clinton turned to Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat, meeting with him in the president's quarters for an hour.

The president arranged separate back-to-back meetings later in the evening with Netanyahu and Arafat, but Lockhart said there was no indication that a three-way meeting of the three leaders was in the works for Sunday night.

Clinton was expected to go back to Washington again later Sunday night. Rubin said he did not know whether the president would return to the bargaining site Monday, but that Secretary of State Madeleine Albright was continuing the negotiations.

A significant stumbling block involved security guarantees for Israel as part of a deal to give up land on the West Bank to the Palestinian Authority, diplomatic sources said. American assertions that the summit was timed to end Sunday night gave way to a statement by Rubin that "we are taking this one meeting at a time."

Palestinian sources said Arafat's demand for a phased release of Palestinians held in Israeli prisons remained unresolved. The sources, insisting on anonymity, said that was the main request Arafat made of Clinton at their meeting Saturday.

Meanwhile, the sources said, Arafat is seeking Israeli acceptance of U.S. monitoring of Palestinian prisons to make sure terrorism suspects are not set free. This is part of an overall U.S. proposal for phased Israeli pullbacks linked to anti-terrorism efforts by the Palestinians.

The U.S. strategy, at least for now, was to push for a full agreement and not sign off on the approach Israel evidently favors of "locking in" the issues resolved and declaring them settled.

Maybe K-State's hopes for a national championship football team aren't too far-fetched after all.

Consider these facts about Saturday's game against visiting Oklahoma State.

- Quarterback Michael Bishop completed only eight of 23 passes.
- Running back Eric Hickson, K-State's leading rusher entering the game, gained only 29 yards on nine carries.
- The Wildcats earned only 15 first downs, compared to the Cowboys' 21.
- K-State held onto the ball for only 23:50.
- The Cats (6-0, 3-0 in Big 12 Conference play), despite several shortcomings, still breezed to a 52-20 victory — their 14th in a row, setting a new school record.

"They're probably the best all-around team we've faced this season," Oklahoma State defensive back Ricky Thompson said. The Cowboys (2-4, 1-3 in Big 12 play) also have played against Nebraska, losing 24-17 to the Huskers on Oct. 3.

The Cats entered the game with the No. 1 scoring offense and scoring defense in the nation, and although they cruised to their fifth-blowout victory in six games, they did so in a different style.

K-State running back Frank Murphy hauls in a 46-yard pass from Michael Bishop for a touchdown in the second quarter Saturday against Oklahoma State at KSU Stadium.

CLIF PALMBERG/KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State, which has made a living marching up and down the field this season, struggled to pick up first downs and failed to put together sustained drives against the Cowboys. The Cats failed to hold the ball for at least three minutes at any point during the game, and only once — on the opening drive — did they run more than six plays.

However, K-State made use of the big play, executing five plays of at least 46 yards.

"They came in with the big plays, and they beat us on our basic ones," Thompson said. "Their offense is pretty good, but it's the defense that keeps the ball in their hands."

The Cats opened the scoring after the defense held the Cowboys to five yards on three plays on the game's initial drive, forcing a punt. On K-State's opening drive, Bishop ran up 48 yards of total offense — even though the Cats only totaled 45 — on three carries and two short passes. He opened the scoring and put K-State up for good with a 12-yard touchdown run.

From that point on, though, Bishop led the Cats with downfield strikes. While he only completed 34 percent of his passes, his completions averaged 35.9 yards. The Cowboys frequently attacked with eight or nine players on the line of scrimmage, and Bishop took advantage of favorable match-

Lockett continues to shred defenses

Redshirt freshman receiver burns Cowboys for 167 yards, 2 TDs

By JOHN BERGGREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Aaron Lockett's numbers have been shocking of late.

After entering the season not listed on K-State's depth chart at the wide receiver position, Lockett has battled back and made his presence felt as a go-to guy.

He did it again on Saturday, catching five passes for 167 yards, including two touchdowns of 59 and 81 yards respectively, to shred Oklahoma State's defense in a 52-20 victory.

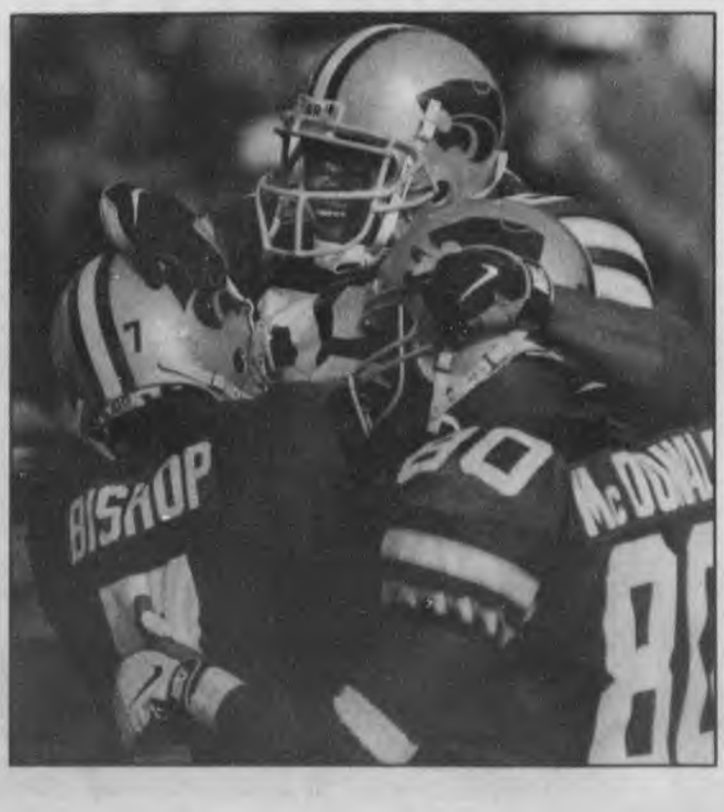
The performance marked the second monstrous game Lockett has had in three outings. The last was against Northeast Louisiana, when he had six catches for 188 yards and two touchdowns. Lockett's big game performances are even surprising to him.

"I was hoping just to contribute in any way possible this year, whether it be on special teams or third-down situations, but I think I'm doing a little more than I expected," Lockett said. "I feel good, and I've kind of turned it on lately and hopefully that continues."

Lockett's first touchdown came in the first quarter with 5:27 left to play when Michael Bishop threw a quick-hitter to Lockett. OSU's Evan Howell missed on his attempt for the pick off, and Trent Alexander missed an open field tackle, leaving nothing but endzone in front of Lockett. The 81-yarder came on a deeper pattern in which Lockett slipped behind safety Ricky Thompson.

"It was a perfect throw, and you really couldn't have thrown it any better than that," Coach Bill Snyder said of Lockett's second TD. "It was right to him, but with his body position, it was a very difficult catch that he made, and he did it with great ease and took it in stride."

The 5-foot-7-inch, 155-pound, redshirt freshman often is teased for his small build, but he said it has put him at an advantage against defensive backs in some situations this season.



"Almost every DB is taller than me, so I have some leverage on them," Lockett said. "I can dip and rip my shoulders to get past a lot of people, and I think my speed helps me tremendously.

"Mike says he has trouble finding me sometimes because I'm not the tallest, but I think it helps me more than it hurts me," he said.

Lockett wasn't the only target for Bishop on Saturday. Bishop connected with four different receivers for 287 yards.

Lockett said the Wildcats knew coming into the game that they could have a big day passing the ball.

"They played man-to-man coverage, and the coaches told us during the week that is was pretty much going to be us versus the DB's, so we had the confidence level that we could get open," Lockett said. "We knew Michael could get the ball to us, and from there on, it was pretty much history."

Michael Bishop (left) and Darnell McDonald (right) congratulate wide receiver Aaron Lockett (center) after a third-quarter touchdown at KSU Stadium. The touchdown was negated after K-State was called for illegal motion. Lockett caught five passes for 167 yards and scored two touchdowns to help beat Oklahoma State. Lockett's two touchdowns came with receptions of 59 yards and 81 yards.

A new retrospective of John Steuart Curry defines the artist, for better or worse

BY RUSSELL FORTMEYER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

I mentioned to a friend the other day that I had seen the new retrospective of John Steuart Curry's work at the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art a week ago.

He coyly replied, "OK, let's see. The President may be impeached, Nebraska lost, and Curry has a retrospective. What's next, a swarm of locusts descends on Kansas?"

His point is well taken.

It's with a certain amount of trepidation, almost physical uneasiness, that one approaches this Curry show,

SELF-PORTRAIT, 1937

"John Steuart Curry: Inventing the Middle West," now in Kansas City, Mo., it runs through Jan. 3, 1999.

Trepidation, not excitement, because Curry is such a hard character to figure out. Not that his work is difficult but because of the myth of the man, his associations with artists Thomas Hart Benton and Grant Wood and the fact that he has never really been a well-loved or well-documented figure of Kansas history or, for that matter, art history.

The show, which was organized at the Elvehjem Museum of Art at the University of Wisconsin-Madison — where Curry painted in the 1940s — and also exhibited at the Fine Arts Museums of San Francisco, collects 50 of his most well-known paintings and drawings.

Like attitudes toward most things that have any monetary value, historians' views of Curry and his work have changed — softened — to the point where this retrospective isn't so much a discovery of a forgotten master but almost recompense for past injustices. Never mind that the show is in Missouri, it's as if Kansas is saying, for the first time, "We're sorry, John, you weren't all that bad."

Curry the illustrator and storyteller

Born in 1897, Curry became by the 1930s one of the most well-known artists in the country. In Kansas, he became a controversial figure for his 1937 murals of state history in the Kansas Statehouse. Curry, Benton and Wood were known as the "The Big Three" of American art and led the nationalist art movement of Regionalism.

Having first studied as an illustrator, Curry's work never really lost its illustrative flavor. He never developed the passion for modernism or the abstraction that would overshadow the Regionalists with the rise of the New York school of painters in the 1940s and 1950s.

After settling in Connecticut, a trip to Paris in 1926 afforded Curry the opportunity to study the old masters, specifically Rembrandt and Peter Rubens. Thus, as early American modernists like Georgia O'Keeffe and Arthur Dove were developing abstraction, Curry turned to rather traditional methods of representation and perspective as a means of conveying the social messages he eventually painted.

Curry as a painter is uninteresting; as a storyteller he can be brilliant. He never created the signature painting style of Benton and Wood, with whom he joined after developing his own approach. If the show does one thing, it gives a picture of Curry as more a religious painter, one whose work had underlying biblical themes.

A work like the seminal "Baptism in Kansas," oil on canvas (1928), becomes a highly detailed composition of figure groups — with traditional foreground, middle ground and background relationships — and an abundant use of color, if to flat effect. As a story — a young girl is baptized in a horse tank by a greenish preacher amid a crowd of solemn worshipers set against a typical Kansas farm — it is perhaps among the best of Curry's art. The same could be said for the beautifully composed "Tornado," oil on canvas (1929) — as stirring a painting of the natural perils of Kansas if there ever was.

Another signature work, this one of a large gathering for a soldier's funeral, "The Return of Private Davis from the Argonne," oil on canvas (1928-40), recalls the 19th-century French artist Gustave Courbet's painting "A Burial at Ornans" in intention but not in execution. Curry could make the narrative work in a painting, just not always in a memorable way.

Curry's unevenness as a painter is uncomfortably evident in this exhibition. It's especially so in "Gospel Train," oil on canvas (1929), which is stultifyingly dull, painted in an over-composed manner. Other examples abound, such as the almost-campy "The Runway," oil on masonite (1932) — one of Curry's circus paintings.

His landscapes, though, have an earthiness that his realist contemporaries all too often ignored. A comparison to a Wood landscape, all stylized and glossed over, doesn't begin to express Curry's harsh realities of Kansas farming or the verdant greens and endless clouds rendered so extraordinarily in "Wisconsin Landscape," oil on canvas (1937-39).

Curry in context

The show includes a handsome catalog — a must-have for the Kansas art devotee — with essays by art historian Charles Eldredge, show curator Patricia Junker and art critic Theodore Wolff. It's not a revisionist book that seeks to place Curry in some pantheon of American artists, as retrospectives tend to do, but instead offers a not-always-positive response to the artist. In his essay, Wolff suggests some of Curry's work can suffer from a romanticized illustrational narrative — a remark that will seem dead-on after seeing the show.

Wolff practically summarizes the show when he writes Curry "had learned ... how to organize pictorial components for maximum narrative and dramatic effect." This is the Curry we know, the mythmaker who gave the state's history a profundity, a universality its reserved citizenry sometimes refused to admit.

In this light, it's evident Curry was out of step with the artistic thought of his day. Although his farm-inspired, homespun subjects perhaps appealed to a public who was deeply isolationist on the cusp of World War II, Curry's work largely was forgotten after his death in 1946. The art world had moved on to embrace an art aesthetic that wasn't as concerned with subject matter as it was process and intellectual foundation.

Curry, I think, remains important to Kansas mainly and to the country if only as a representation of Kansas history. He did not, as the critic Robert Hughes has written of Benton, produce "major art." Curry did not define this state or set a course for Kansas art that has remained, but he did document a particular time in our history — if only 20 years — that was fascinating.

Regardless of the technical insufficiency of the artist, this Kansan has seen Curry's Topeka mural cycle, and specifically "Tragic Prelude," with John Brown madly standing between opposing sides of the Civil War, struck in fierce opposition to slavery, wild hair blowing in our characteristic wind, as meaningful paintings that inspire and awe.

I often remind myself of just where Curry stands in Kansas history by a colleague's headline, which was axed before publication, written for my review of a show of his work at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art last year: "Local artist paints Kansas landscape."

Just who was Curry, and why should I care?

That answer obviously lies in an art gallery in Kansas City, Mo.

6 inducted into Sports Hall of Fame Friday

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Six new members of the Kansas State Sports Hall of Fame were inducted Friday night in Forum Hall.

The class of 1998 included Albert "Monk" Edwards, who lettered in football, basketball and baseball; Howard Shannon, who guided the basketball team to the Big 7 Conference title in 1948; track and field standout Kenny Harrison; and basketball greats Mitch Richmond, Priscilla Gary-Sweeney and Mike Evans.

All of the inductees were honored at halftime of the Oklahoma State football game Saturday afternoon.

At a press conference Friday morning, members of the class of 1998 had a chance to discuss the paths that led to their successes at K-State and beyond.

"I attribute my complete career to Kansas State," Harrison said, "because I grew up in Wisconsin, and a lot of the same values that I had there were really instilled in me here. I had great coaching staffs. They pretty much formed and shaped me into the kind of person I am today. The people that I have been involved with have had a huge impact on me."

A 16-time Big 8 Conference champion in track and field from 1984-88, Harrison was an 11-time All-American and is still the K-State record holder in the long jump and triple jump. In the 1996 Olympic Games, Harrison set the Olympic record and won the gold medal in the triple jump.

Harrison said his induction into the Hall of Fame meant more to him than any of his previous achievements.

"To be here or to actually get the information that you're getting inducted into the Hall of Fame, it's something that's more special than all of the awards I've had so far," he said.

Also thankful for his admittance into the Hall of Fame was Richmond, who said his return to Manhattan conjured up a lot of good memories.

"It's been about five years, actually, since I've been back," Richmond said. "It's a great honor, and I feel good about coming back. I have some great memories that I left behind here. The memory that sticks out the most is when we kicked Kansas' butt. It's good to be able to have a rivalry like that."

Richmond helped lead the Wildcats to a school-tying 25 wins and an Elite Eight appearance in the NCAA Tournament during his two years at K-State.

The fifth all-time leading scorer in school history, Richmond continues to excel in the NBA, where he won NBA Rookie-of-the-Year in 1989 and has been on five NBA All-Star teams, winning Most Valuable Player in the 1995 All-Star Game. Richmond has played on two Olympic teams and won the gold with Dream Team III in 1996.

Richmond said he chose K-State for several reasons, including the coaching staff.

"Dana Altman was my junior college coach," Richmond said.

"He was a big influence in coming to K-State, and also, when I met Lon Kruger, I really thought he was a swell guy. We were in a situation where K-State was making a transition with a new coach, new players, new system. It was an opportunity for me to come right in and kind of grow with the system."

ups.

He connected with Aaron Lockett for touchdowns of 59 and 81 yards, hit Frank Murphy for a 46-yard scoring pass and found Gavin Peries 60 yards downfield, setting up a 2-yard touchdown run by Murphy.

"We knew we had to throw the football," K-State offensive coordinator Ron Hudson said. "If we could throw the football, we were going to be in good shape. We knew that. You're not gonna run it against a team that puts nine people up there. You're just not gonna do that."

Bishop passed for 287 yards — his third-highest career total — and ran for another 89 yards, including a 51-yarder, to become K-State's career rushing leader among quarterbacks.

"He's a great quarterback. He makes great throws," Oklahoma State defensive coordinator Rob Ryan said. "You think you have him covered on top, and then the guy throws 100 yards. There's no playground that can house that guy. He made some great plays."

Jarrod Cooper led the Cats on defense with 10 tackles, including a sack, three for losses and his first career interception. The pick was the Cats' ninth this season by the ninth different player. The Cats had five all last season.

Yankees win Game 2, 9-3; series moves to San Diego

The Padres face a tough task in trying to regroup for Game 3 on Tuesday night at San Diego. David Cone will start for New York against NLCS MVP Sterling Hitchcock, a former Yankees pitcher.

BY BEN WALKER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Wonder no more why these New York Yankees are so special.

From the very first inning, El Duque & Co. demonstrated for all — particularly the Padres — how they've won 123 games and staked their claim as the greatest team in baseball history.

Orlando Hernandez dominated on the mound, Bernie Williams and Jorge Posada homered to lead a relentless attack, and Yankees fielding sparkled Sunday night in a 9-3 romp over San Diego for a 2-0 lead in the World Series.

After winning Game 1 by playing home-run derby, the Yankees showed off their whole potent package in Game 2. The Padres never had a chance, with rookie Ricky Ledee's RBI single making it 7-0 in the third and chasing ill starter Andy Ashby.

That was more than plenty for Hernandez, the Cuban defector who floated to freedom less than 10 months ago and helped save New York's season with a win in Game 4 of the AL championship series.

Exactly a year after his younger half-brother, Livan Hernandez, pitched Florida past Cleveland in Game 1 on his way to becoming MVP of the World Series, the quirky El Duque shut down San Diego on one run in seven innings.

By the time Posada's two-run homer in the fifth made it 9-1, the sellout crowd of 56,692 was going crazy while several Padres players were standing with heads down and hands on hips.

The Padres face a tough task in trying to regroup for Game 3 on Tuesday night at San Diego. David Cone will start for New York against NLCS MVP Sterling Hitchcock, a former Yankees pitcher — of the previous 44 teams to take a 2-0 lead in the series, 33 have won the championship.

San Diego's best opportunity came in the first. Tony Gwynn got his fourth hit of the series, and Greg Vaughn walked, but right fielder Paul O'Neill made a leaping catch as he crashed into the wall on Wally Joyner's drive for the final out.

From then on, it was all Yankees. Williams hit his ninth-career postseason homer and Ledee, a rookie playing with exceptional poise, enjoyed his second straight night of getting two hits and a walk.

Actually, Ashby could have had a 1-2-3 bottom of the first with any luck. But on a night when he had a sore throat and felt poorly, he got no help.

Chuck Knoblauch's foul pop was dropped near the screen by sliding catcher Greg Myers — it was correctly ruled no play — and then the leadoff man exemplified the Yankees' patience at the plate, drawing an eight-pitch walk.

One out later, O'Neill slapped a grounder at three-time Gold Glove third baseman Ken Caminiti. Despite having plenty of time, Caminiti rushed his throw, and it was too high for Joyner, an error that enabled Knoblauch to score.

Chili Davis and Scott Brosius added RBI singles and even though all three runs were unearned, they counted. The Padres even looked shaky getting the last out of the inning, when second baseman Quilvio Veras dropped Posada's line drive and made a poor throw barely in time.

Williams' two-run homer highlighted a three-run third. Tino Martinez and Brosius, who each had three of the Yankees' 16 hits, singled to set up Ledee's RBI single in the third.

That was all for Ashby, and it wasn't until reliever Brian Boehringer pitched a scoreless fourth that Padres pitchers retired even two batters in a row.

Hernandez, meanwhile, set down 10-straight batters in the middle innings. With his navy blue socks pulled high, his unusual array of motions and pitches tamed hitters who had never faced him.

The Padres shuffled their lineup, sending seven left-handed hitters against the righty Hernandez. It did no good, as El Duque struck out seven and gave up six hits.

Mike Stanton relieved to start the eighth, and San Diego scored twice. Pinch-hitter Ruben Rivera, cousin of Yankees closer Mariano Rivera, hit an RBI double and scored on pinch-hitter Mark Sweeney's single.

Professor helps open Hawaii to guide dogs

By Nancy Grathwohl
Kansas State Collegian

Guide-dog users who wish to travel to Hawaii can thank Deborah Briggs for making their trip something no one will bark about.

Deborah Briggs, professor of diagnostic medicine pathobiology, testified in a lawsuit that guide dogs could enter the state of Hawaii safely without the risk of introducing rabies to the island.

She received the Guide Dog Users Inc. Access Partners Award in recognition of the service she did for blind people and their guide dogs. This is only the fourth time the award has been presented for an individual's efforts.

Janelle Edwards, her guide dog, Harley, and members of Guide Dog Users Inc. presented Briggs with the award.

"Her research and expert testimony helped to win GDUI's lawsuit against the state of Hawaii and thereby gave guide-dog teams the right to travel to that state without having to face months of quarantine for rabies," Edwards said.

The state of Hawaii was being sued for violating the Americans with Disabilities Act.

"The rabies laboratory at Kansas State University has an international reputation for excellence, and our services for testing the blood of service dogs was critical for the state of Hawaii to have the confidence that measures could be put in place to reassure residents of Hawaii that rabies would not be inadvertently introduced into the island," Briggs said.

"My dog, Harley, has been with me since 1996. She helps me be more independent than I could be if I utilized a cane"

— Janelle Edwards, Guide-dog owner

Guide dogs make their owners' everyday lives easier, Edwards said.

"My dog, Harley, has been with me since August 1996. She helps me be more independent than I could be if I utilized a cane," Edwards said. "I also think that I am safer with a dog, because she sees hazards overhead, like tree limbs that a cane cannot find. If we are in a big room, like an auditorium, she can find the exit much easier than I could without her."

Briggs was honored with a plaque that read "For Distinguished Service and Dedication to the Ideals of Access and Independence for Blind People and Their Guide Dogs."

Scout with Tourette's faces uncertain future

The Associated Press

RAYMORE, Mo. — He's only 11, but Robbie Thompson knows how it feels to be shunned by adult society.

He's spent his life trying to suppress a neurological disorder known as Tourette's syndrome — a condition that can cause uncontrollable outbursts, like the time he kicked a boy at summer camp.

Now, fears about that unpredictability could lead to Robbie's ouster from Boy Scouts. The scoutmaster of Troop 124, John McLaughlin, said some parents of the troop members have threatened to remove their sons if Robbie stays in.

"The parents we have are very family-oriented and concerned about the safety of their children," McLaughlin said. "I don't know if any amount of education would make them feel secure."

On Sunday, Robbie's parents planned to discuss the matter with scouting officials who suggest Robbie be moved to a different troop.

Mark Brayer, director of support services for the Heart of America Council of Boy Scouts, said officials were trying to find a "perfect match" for Robbie with a troop better suited to deal with his disability.

Robbie just wants to stay with his friends.

"I wish it wouldn't turn out like this," Robbie said. "I would say, 'Let's forget about it. You didn't do anything, and I didn't do anything.' And we could just be a troop again."

His father, Russ Thompson, said the outburst at summer camp came after two other Scouts started teasing his son.

He said Robbie tried to suppress it.

"He started kicking and throwing himself against a wall," Thompson said. "A little bit later, he went up to another boy and kicked him."

The boy's leg was bruised, and a camp chaplain had to calm Robbie down, Thompson said.

McLaughlin said there have been other outbursts as well, and he said the other parents fear Robbie could harm their children.

Thompson said he and his wife understand their concerns. But he said Robbie has been in Scouts with some of the boys for four or five years.

Publication Practice / Internship / Graphic Design — MC 360 / Art Dept.

If you are interested in working in newspaper ad design / production you can earn one hour of journalism credit during spring semester 1999. Attend class one day a week from 8:30-11:30 a.m. You pick the day but only one student will be accepted for each day so first-come, first-served. The instructor's permission is required. No prerequisites required.

If you are a graphic design major and would like an on-campus internship for credit, stop by for an application. Prerequisites must be met and instructor's permission is required.

The experience you earn in the spring would qualify you to apply for a paid, part-time position in the summer or fall.

Come to 113 Kedzie from 8 a.m.-3 p.m. for more information and syllabus.

HOMECOMING

Lansdowne said events like the Punt, Pass and Kick contest on Tuesday and the K-State Trivia Day on Thursday were new last year. She said she hoped participation in those events will increase.

"They were new last year, and since we didn't see a huge crowd, they will still be new to some people this year," Lansdowne said.

Ambassador elections will begin Wednesday and continue through Friday. All students have the opportunity to vote between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. on the first floor of the Union. The winners will be announced at halftime of Saturday's football game.

Purple Pride Day is Wednesday. All students, faculty and staff are encouraged to show their K-State pride by wearing purple.

Also on Wednesday, the bodybuilding preliminary competition will begin at 7 p.m. at Ahearn Field House. Lansdowne said it is one of the highlights of the Homecoming competition.

"It's a lot of fun. It's pretty impressive the things that they can do," she said.

Late last week, Homecoming chairs from fraternity and sorority houses voted to go ahead with the bodybuilding competition after six greeks were injured in practices for the event.

The competition will conclude with the finals at 7 p.m. Thursday at Ahearn.

The biggest change this year is the day of the Homecoming parade. It typically has been on Saturday, but Lansdowne said the committee decided to move it to Friday this year because of the changing time of the football game and also to better suit fans' schedules.

"This way, everyone can come to the parade and still be able to tailgate on Saturday," she said.

The Homecoming parade will start at 4 p.m. at Manhattan Town Center and proceed to Aggieville down Poyntz Avenue and 11th Street.

The parade is one activity that remains a key focus of Homecoming, Lansdowne said.

"It sticks in people's minds," she said. "It's a tradition universally for Homecoming, for K-State or anyone."

The Homecoming competition will conclude with a pep rally and bonfire at 6 p.m. Friday at Memorial Stadium. All competitors will participate in the Pant the Chant contest, with the winners of the competition announced at the end of the rally.

Lansdowne said Homecoming is important because it unites the campus.

"Homecoming week is a good example of the entire campus working together," she said. "There's something everyday for everyone."

Becky Hurrelbrink, Homecoming chair for Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority, said she agreed.

"The only important part of Homecoming is the involvement it provides for houses with campus spirit," Hurrelbrink said. "It's a lot of fun, I enjoy the activities a lot and also getting to know other houses better, because that's really what it's about."

CONDOM

that a lot of people think about, and when they do, often it's too late.

"The moment of passion is not the time to think, 'I don't have a condom with me,'" Dorst said. "By having them available like that, we hope that people will pick them up and carry them with them."

Although the display could help prevent the spread of AIDS, Claar said it does so in a way that indirectly shows public approval of premarital sex.

"In publicly offering free condoms to every college student, we send out the message, 'Here, please make use of these. Everyone needs condoms in college,'" Claar said.

Dorst said she finds it hard to believe that a person who has not had sex previously would decide to have it because a condom is available. She said the decision of whether to have sex is based on other factors.

Dorst said she isn't sure how long her group will be able to provide the free condoms. She said she would like to conduct a survey after a couple of months to find out student response to the condoms.

Regional AIDS Project receives grants from the Kansas Department of Health and Environment to find ways to distribute condoms to people in the area. Residence halls are just one place where free condoms can be found. Dorst said they have given condoms to local bars as well as other locations in the community.

Karen Gaffin, junior in Spanish and political science and Strong Complex community assistant, said the display will help residents feel more comfortable, because it sends a message that many students deal with problems related to sex.

"Sex is going on in this residence hall and all around us, and if you ignore that, you're promoting AIDS," Gaffin said.

amount of tickets sold, so that is going to increase the amount of campers," she said. "There was a lot of people watching television and playing games."

Asbury said there is a lot of excitement surrounding this year's team.

"We have a lot of Kansas products on this team and a good team overall," he said. "This is one of those years where the Big 12 is wide open, and a good crowd could win games for you."

Senior guard Chris Griffin was grateful for the fans' support.

"It's always nice to have the fans come out and support us." he said. "Pizza and handing out shirts is our way of showing our appreciation for what they do for us."

Camp out festivities will continue today when ICAT ticket holders pick up their tickets from 9:00-11:00 a.m. General admission ticket holders can get their tickets from 12:00-5:00 p.m.

Thieves blamed in explosion in Nigeria; 250 people dead

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAGOS, Nigeria — A pipeline explosion apparently sparked by thieves siphoning off oil led to an inferno that swept through villages, killing at least 250 people and destroyed surrounding cropland. The fire began late Saturday and was still raging Sunday night.

An official death toll was not available, but journalists and witnesses on the scene near the town of Jesse, 180 miles southeast of Lagos, estimated that at least 250 people were killed.

There were 230 bodies in one pile of corpses, journalists said, and residents said at least a dozen more bodies already had been taken away by relatives. In addition, some of the injured taken to area hospitals had died, officials said.

Many of the victims were farmers and villagers sleeping in their homes when the fire began. Vandals also were among the dead, including children. Their corpses had been found still clutching plastic cups, funnels and cans intended to collect fuel from the pipeline.

Military commander Walter Feghabo ordered a mass burial for those whose bodies were charred beyond recognition.

"I feel terrible," Emmanuel Akhihiero, a government petroleum official, said in a telephone interview. "I cannot believe what I have seen. Corpses, corpses."

Feghabo said that more than 120 firefighters still were trying late Sunday to contain the flames in Jesse and the nearby villages of Mossogar and Oghara. "I just cannot believe this," Feghabo said by telephone, after surveying a pile of corpses.

The above-ground pipeline, linking an oil refinery in the southeastern city of Warri, 200 miles southeast of the commercial capital of Lagos, with the northern city of Kaduna, nearly 400 miles away, exploded when thieves sabotaged the line hoping to siphon off oil, an official for Nigeria's state petroleum corporation said on condition of anonymity.

The official said authorities believed the vandals' tools used to break the pipe open had caused a spark, setting the pipeline alight. Witnesses said they heard a loud roar and saw the oily flames spread quickly as the slicks spread.

Next space shuttle flight to carry K-State projects

BY JEFF SUTTON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

New permanent laboratory in space might be home to future K-State projects

K-State scientists soon will be sending projects aboard the Space Shuttle Discovery STS-95 to experiment with ways to use space for commercial purposes.

The projects are sponsored by BioServe Space Technologies, a partnership between K-State and the University of Colorado working with NASA.

One of the chief projects is overseen by Peter Wong, professor of biology. He is trying to fix nitrogen to cereal crops, such as wheat. Currently, nitrogen only fixes to legumes such as alfalfa, soybeans and clover.

"If wheat were able to fix its own nitrogen, nitrogen fertilizer application would be greatly reduced," Wong said. "Also, it's good for the environment, because often times, putting on too much nitrogen fertilizer will pollute ground water and so forth."

As a result, farmers would be able to save money and time using less nitrogen fertilizer.

"If you're a farmer and you're not going to be growing a crop, you might want to plant alfalfa and just let it absorb nitrogen from the atmosphere and replenish it to the soil," chief BioServe scientist Terry Johnson said.

"You would use less fertilizer then, but there are crops like wheat that do not fix nitrogen. Billions of dollars are spent just in the Midwest on nitrate fertilizers to keep the wheat crops at a maximum level."

Even though Wong has been working on nitrogen fixation for several years, the experiments are only during shuttle flights, which are only a couple times each year.

"Dr. Wong's experiments are still in the very early stages, even though we've done a lot of work with regard to commercialization," Johnson said. "But if he is successful in these first steps as he has been so far, the payoff is unbelievable, as far as economic impact and what companies can gain."

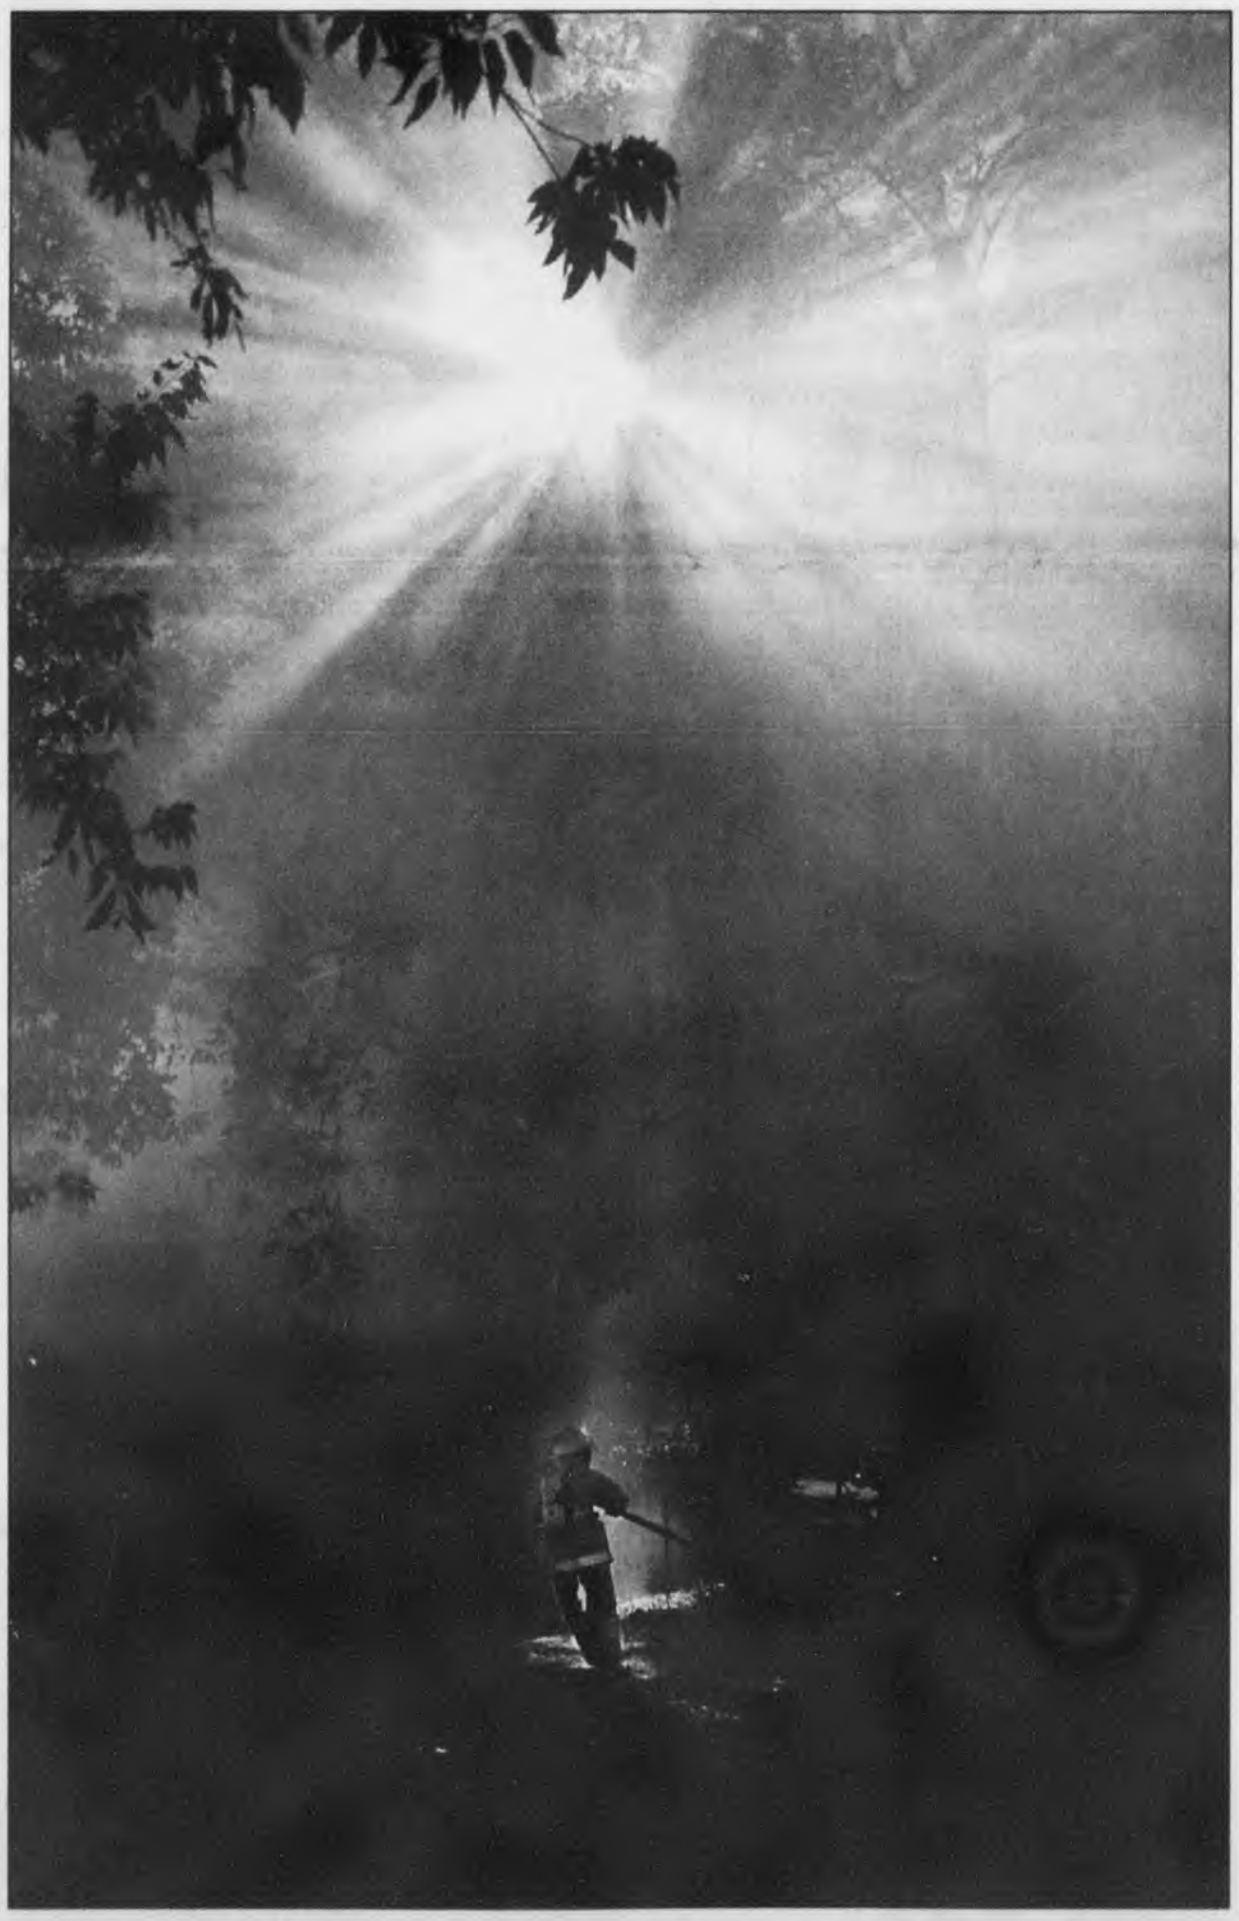
While in microgravity, the experimental procedure is very complicated, said Laurine Speights, BioServe marketing and program development manager.

"The experiments go into test tube-like devices, and then those go into a cylinder. Then that cylinder is placed into a suitcase, which is set into a panel of the shuttle where all the suitcases go," Speights said.

The Oct. 29 flight includes more than wheat seedlings. Senator John Glenn also will be part of an experiment during the nine-day flight.

"Glenn is going up to understand a lot of things that happen to the body, because in space, you have a loss of bone mass," Speights said.

"Similarly, that's what happens to people when they age, they experience bone loss."



One of the disadvantages of using a space shuttle for microgravity is the short length of time for experiments. To increase the length from days to months and even a year, BioServe is looking to construct a space station.

"They should start constructing in about a year, and it will take about four years to completely construct it," Johnson said.

"We may be looking at 2002 or 2003 because so often there are delays that are inevitable, but it will be a permanently orbiting station which is actually a laboratory."

Overall, the future of BioServe will be in the hands of K-Staters.

"I think it's a program that people at K-State should be very proud of. It is a real Wildcat program from the very beginning," Johnson said.

A Manhattan-area firefighter pulls a hose near a mobile home to help put out the fire as smoke fills the sky late Monday morning. The home, owned by Lois M. Jones, 78, was on Priboth Road near the Riley County Transfer Station.

3-alarm fire destroys woman's home; no one hurt

BY TRAVIS D. LENKNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A three-alarm fire south of Manhattan Monday morning caused $15,000 damage and left a Riley County woman homeless.

The 11:30 a.m. blaze destroyed at least half of the structure at 1821 Priboth Road, where Lois M. Jones, 78, had lived since 1982.

No one was injured.

Riley County fire chief Pat Collins said volunteers from the Hunters Island and Tatarrax fire stations responded to the call. Fifteen firefighters worked for more than an hour to put out the fire. Crews from the Konza Prairie station were called to the blaze after other trucks arrived.

"The whole back half of the trailer was a loss," Collins said. "There's still some stuff in the kitchen and living room that's salvageable but even that is heat and smoke damaged."

Collins said he didn't believe Jones had insurance. American Red Cross workers had arrived to assist her when fire crews left, he said.

Both Jones and Collins said they believed the fire started near the home's hot water heater, though Collins said the area was so damaged that the exact cause wasn't immediately determined.

"I heard a crackling sound like glass breaking," Jones said. "I looked out the window and didn't see anything, but then I came outside and saw smoke coming up, and I knew it was from the water heater."

Jones called 911 as the house filled with smoke. Outside, as she waited, Jones realized she had forgotten the keys to her car, which was parked in a carport connected to the house.

"I got out here and saw the car in there and remembered that I left my keys inside," she said. "I couldn't go get them, so I just pushed the car out."

Firefighters later moved the vehicle further

Ticket Camp Out ends; season begins Nov. 3

BY FRANK FLATON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The annual K-State Basketball Camp Out and preseason ticket purchasing came to a close Monday at Ahearn Field House.

About 100 campers turned out for the event on Sunday. More than 4,700 tickets already have been sold through football combination tickets and group seating.

"There were a quite of few groups that signed up for the Camp Out," said Missy Decker, assistant marketing director for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics. "A good amount registered for group seating. This shows that a good amount of students will show up for the games."

Ticket sales got underway yesterday, starting with a lottery drawing for ICAT ticket holders at 8:45 a.m. ICAT members picked up their tickets between 9 and 11 a.m., and general admission ticket holders grabbed their tickets between 12 and 5 p.m.

Students at the Camp Out are allowed to buy tickets for themselves and nine others, but some students had trouble verifying the ICAT membership of the others in their group Sunday. Officials were able to correct the problem Monday.

"We didn't have any problems," Decker said.

"There were a few students who didn't have IDs or social security numbers for people on their list, so we weren't able to verify them as ICAT ticket holders."

Decker said those who didn't have IDs were allowed to come back Monday to receive their tickets.

"There was just a minimal amount of people we had to verify this morning," Decker said. "Not all of our systems are foolproof, but everyone was taken care of that was an ICAT member."

There were only a few students involved in the confusion.

"There was a small mix-up with IDs for our list," Kellie McClellan, junior in elementary education, said. "But they worked it out, and I have no complaints about it."

This year, the Camp Out was spiced up with a free-throw contest and a slam-dunk contest, which was judged by five K-State basketball team members.

"It was a lot of fun," McClellan said. "I like the Camp Out; it's a good way to interact with different social groups. It helps to get people geared up about basketball."

McClellan said she thought scheduling the Camp Out on a school day was a problem.

"The only bad thing about it is going to classes on Monday. It would be better if it was on a Friday or Saturday," she said.

Nathan Johannes, freshman in engineering, said he enjoyed the Camp Out.

"The weather was beautiful," he said. "We just sat around, played some cards and football. It was a really fun night."

Marlatt, West take 1st place in Crazy Cat Kickoff contest

BY SUZANNE WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State residence halls began Homecoming week activities Monday night with Crazy Cat Kickoff.

There were five events, and halls were split into teams of 10.

The first event was a bat and cone relay race.

"The purpose is to get them dizzy and then see how well they can run the course," said Dawn Kramer, Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls national communications coordinator and sophomore in family and consumer sciences education.

HOMECOMING 1998
"Ride the Tide of Purple Pride"

Marlatt and West halls won the relay race.

"It was so much fun, you got really sick around the first cone, but then you were fine," Devin Schehrer, Moore Hall resident and freshman in secondary education, said.

The next event was the Lifesavers and toothpick race. Everyone had toothpicks in their mouths and had to pass the Lifesavers to the next person just with the toothpick. They could not touch each other with the toothpicks or the Lifesavers.

John Klingele, Putnam Hall president and freshman in civil engineering, said he felt a little too close to his teammates.

"We were about an inch apart from one another," Klingele said. "This is closer than Putnam has been before, ever."

The final event was the build-a-sundae race. KSUARH laid one team member on the ground as other teammates dumped ice cream, whipped cream and chocolate on them.

Marlatt and West halls took first place overall. Haymaker, Ford and Goodnow halls took second place. Moore Hall and Smurthwaite and Smith scholarship houses took third place. Strong Complex came in last.

HOMECOMING CALENDAR OF EVENTS

Every day this week the Collegian will publish a calendar for that day and the following day's events, until Saturday's Homecoming game against Iowa State.

DAILY REWIND

Daily Rewind collects the top local, state, national and world news from the past 24 hours. Briefs are compiled from wire and staff reports.

Topeka schools meet integration regulations

TOPEKA — Four and a half decades after the Supreme Court overturned the "separate but equal" doctrine in Brown vs. Topeka Board of Education, the Topeka School district wants to close the historical desegregation case.

The district has spent $19.5 million to build three new schools, met the ordered racial balance in its schools for three consecutive years and the racial balance of its staffing has been in compliance for five years.

Rich Jones, who represents the plaintiffs in the case, said he hadn't reviewed the district's desegregation efforts recently and couldn't predict what his response would be. He said he would confer with the plaintiff community and co-council Chris Hansen of the American Civil Liberties Union in New York City.

Gary Sebelius, attorney for USD 501, said he expects negotiations to begin after the district submits its annual desegregation-compliance report to the federal court Nov. 1.

Ideally, he said, the plaintiff's attorneys would agree to the district's request for "unitary status," which would loosen some of the restrictions on the district.

To reach that unitary status, a judge will have to determine that the Topeka schools have been integrated appropriately and that federal court supervision is no longer necessary in the capitol city of 120,000, Sebelius said.

U.S. District Judge Richard Rogers has heard the case several times since it was reopened in 1979.

Eleven years ago, he agreed to the district's request for unitary status, concluding that "there is no illegal, intentional, systematic or residual separation of races" in Topeka schools. His ruling was overturned by the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver.

If the district is granted unitary status in the coming year, administrators said they plan to continue the integration plan, but they would have more freedom to change boundaries and close schools.

The only immediate change administrators are considering is returning the elementary gifted program, now in magnet schools, to neighborhood schools.

Increased production results in low crop prices

TOPEKA — Farmers across the state are feeling the financial pinch from low commodity prices.

But they shouldn't blame a federal Freedom to Farm Act passed two years ago, U.S. Sen. Pat Roberts said Monday.

Roberts said the law, which phases out crop subsidies in exchange for removing constraints on what crops farmers plant in what acreages, has nothing to do with low prices.

It's not surprising that Roberts would defend the law. He was its chief architect, having served as chairman of the House Agriculture Committee when it was drafted, the same year he won his Senate seat.

"Most farmers I talk to are happy with the flexibility," Roberts told reporters during a Statehouse news conference.

Roberts said the low prices are in part the result of increased production of crops. He noted that China, Australia and European nations increased their wheat production.

AIDS patients quit medication for study

BOSTON — A man infected with the AIDS virus has volunteered to stop taking the three-drug cocktail that has kept him healthy for 18 months so doctors can see if he can do without it.

Though other AIDS patients have gone off medication and lived with manageable levels of the virus, this is believed to be the first time researchers will monitor such a case.

"There are a lot of anecdotes, but there's been really no systematic study that I'm aware of," said Dr. Clifford Lane, who said he plans to launch a similar study later this fall at the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases.

Nineteen other AIDS patients from around Boston also will participate in the Massachusetts General Hospital study led by Dr. Bruce Walker, including others who will stop taking the AIDS cocktail.

Walker said he hopes to prove that patients treated early would be able to stop treatment and live without the side effects, expense and hassle of drug cocktails.

While there is no way to eliminate the virus from the body, drugs successfully have lowered it to undetectable levels in many patients. The patients suffer a variety of side effects, including dangerously high cholesterol, diabetes, kidney stones and intestinal problems.

"It could give us a better perspective on whether we can think in terms of stopping drugs," said Dr. Anthony Fauci, head of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases.

Patients who stop taking medication risk having their conditions worsen, he said. There also is a possibility that the drugs might cease to work if the patient chooses to resume taking them.

"But it's more likely that if the virus comes back, it will come back in a manner that's sensitive to the drugs," Fauci said.

Patients who volunteer for such studies are aware of the risks, Fauci said.

Two years ago, a German man stopped taking AIDS medication against his doctors' orders. His virus remains at undetectable levels.

Walker's study could lead to effective yet less aggressive treatment methods in developing countries, which have most of the world's AIDS cases but the fewest resources to fight the disease.

Charred bodies litter ground after explosion

JESSE, Nigeria — The charred remains of victims still clutched the plastic cups, funnels and cans they intended to use to scoop gasoline from a punctured pipeline before it exploded in this southern Nigerian town.

The bodies were among at least 500 killed when the fuel erupted into a ball of fire over the weekend, an inferno so intense that flames — some shooting 65 feet in the air — still flared Monday as firefighters let the last of the gasoline burn away.

The burned body of one woman was found with her dead baby still strapped to her back. Many other victims were farmers and villagers sleeping in homes consumed by the blaze that also spread to nearby towns.

Authorities said they believe the pipeline was punctured intentionally and that scavengers' tools sparked the explosion Saturday, said an official for Nigeria's state petroleum corporation, speaking on condition of anonymity. Some newspaper reports, however, said it might have been a lighted cigarette that started the blaze.

A mass grave was being dug at the edge of Jesse to bury hundreds of unidentified corpses, many burned beyond recognition. Some bodies remained scattered about town on Monday afternoon, but most were piled together. About 100 people were hospitalized, many of them in serious condition.

Military ruler Gen. Abdulsalami Abubakar flew in by helicopter for a 15-minute visit. He said the government would pay for medical treatment, but that there would be no compensation to survivors, apparently because many of those killed were believed to be stealing fuel.

Area residents were furious over the deaths.

"This is a tragedy of huge proportions," the Rev. Andrew Imadu, a local minister, said at one funeral in Jesse. "Our own people have been driven by deprivation to such a desperate search for livelihood."

Gubernatorial candidate visits K-State campus

By Nate Jenkins
Kansas State Collegian

Steve Hebert/Kansas State Collegian

Tom Sawyer, Democratic candidate for governor, speaks to a small crowd in the K-State Student Union free-speech zone during a visit to campus Monday afternoon.

Tom Sawyer, the Kansas Democratic candidate for governor, was at K-State on Monday as part of a campaign trip taking him across the state leading up to the Nov. 3 election.

In an informal presentation in the free-speech zone, Rep. Sawyer, D-Wichita, said he had six primary goals for Kansas, if elected governor.

Education, he said, was No. 1 on his list.

Sawyer's plan for higher education includes a program called Student Tuition Assistance Recognition Scholarship. Sawyer said he modeled STARS after a similar program in Georgia called HOPE.

Under the STARS scholarship, all Kansas high school seniors with a grade point average of at least 2.75 would be eligible to receive $1,300 a semester to pay for tuition. The scholarship would cover four years of a university education, with students having five years to use it.

College students would be eligible as well.

"STARS opens more doors than what we've had up to now," Sawyer said. "For the last 12 years, Kansas has used lottery dollars to fund economic development, but it's time to do something different."

STARS requires about $40 million of the estimated $60 million to be raised annually through the buying of lottery tickets to fund the program. The money would cover tuition for the six regents universities, the community colleges and vocational schools.

Another part of Sawyer's education plan is to initiate an adult-mentoring program for grade school students having academic problems.

"If I'm elected, I'd have a goal that every third grader be able to read," Sawyer said. "We need to reduce class sizes to help students as well."

Speaking later in the afternoon in the Union Big 12 Room, Sawyer emphasized the importance of education and said the state hasn't fulfilled its responsibility to students.

"With the current governor and the prosperity we are enjoying now, education isn't being taken care of enough," Sawyer said. "We're enjoying good times now and have only increased funding for schools 3 percent in the last seven years."

Sawyer said that for his plan to work, a secretary of education would be appointed to his cabinet, something Sawyer said Kansas has never had.

Sawyer said Elizabeth Baker, his running mate, a former Republican legislator and State Board of Education member, would be his first education secretary.

As Riley County citizens consider on Nov. 3 whether to vote to extend the local sales tax or not, Sawyer spoke about making cuts in sales tax on a statewide level.

He also said he wants to abolish the food sales tax.

In a recent meeting of the League of Women Voters, Republican candidates for the State House of Representatives Kent Glasscock and Jeff Peterson said they don't support getting rid of the sales tax. Democratic candidate Sydney Carlin said during the meeting that she did support it and was alongside Sawyer today when he was answering student questions in the free-speech zone.

"People across the state tell me they don't notice when tax cuts are made," Sawyer said. "We need to get rid of the sales tax on food, where it will help mothers, working people and the poor."

Slowing the spread of corporate-run hog farms in the state — a topic that is a source of debate all through Kansas — is another of Sawyer's goals if elected governor.

"We really need to look at how these farms affect the environment," Sawyer said. "If they are polluting the water and air, then maybe we don't need them."

Hand grenade assault injures 64 in Israel, complicates peace talks

By Laurie Copans
The Associated Press

BEERSHEBA, Israel — A Palestinian threw two hand grenades near a bus stop crowded with Israel soldiers this morning, injuring at least 64 people during a delicate phase of the Mideast peace talks.

Three victims were in serious condition after the rush-hour assault in Beersheba, a desert town 50 miles south of Jerusalem. About a third of the injured were soldiers.

The assailant, whose attack prompted Israel today to suspend most negotiations with the Palestinians during a summit in Maryland, was identified as a supporter of the militant group Hamas. He was in custody.

After the 8 a.m. blasts, army-issued olive duffel bags and clothes were strewn on the pavement near a glass-covered bus stop. A soldier's polished black boots, with the socks stuffed inside, were left on a traffic island.

There were conflicting reports on how the assailant was caught.

Some witnesses said as the Palestinian fled, he ran into a bus turning the corner. A bus driver said he ran down the attacker. Israel TV's Channel Two showed footage of a bus whose glass door was shattered by the impact.

However, a construction worker, Avi Friedman, said he jumped the man from behind and wrestled him to the ground.

Announcing the suspension of negotiations on all but security issues on the fifth day of a Mideast summit, David Bar-Illan, a senior adviser to Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, said: "The Palestinian Authority is not doing anything to crack down on terrorist activity."

Netanyahu has repeatedly said he would not seal an agreement on a West Bank troop pullback unless the Palestinians meet their security obligations and do more to prevent terror attacks.

"It is up to the Palestinian Authority to fight terror in both word and deed," he said in a statement today.

Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat called Netanyahu after receiving word of this morning's attack. Arafat said he regretted the incident and ordered an inquiry, according to a statement by Netanyahu's office.

President Clinton deplored the attack, saying it complicated already troubled talks.

"The issues are difficult. The distrust is deep. The going has been tough, but the parties must consider the consequences of failure" as well as the benefits of progress, Clinton said in Washington.

Arafat's West Bank security chief, Jibril Rajoub, said the assailant was a 29-year-old father of five from the West Bank town of Hebron. He said the man was a supporter of Hamas and was imprisoned twice for activities linked to the group.

Sheik Ahmed Yassin, founder of Hamas, stopped short of claiming responsibility for the attack, saying only that "what happened this morning is part of our continued resistance to the occupation of our land."

Basketball Camp Out shows all that is right with K-State athletics

The Collegian Editorial Board is proud of the men's basketball team and its supporters for making this year's Basketball Camp Out a success.

The Camp Out is a K-State tradition that stretches well back into the late 1960s and early 1970s. It began during a time in which K-State was known for its basketball program, not its football program; when game nights packed Ahearn Field House with thousands of screaming fans, squished together like sardines; when people camped out not only for basketball season tickets, but for seats between games. At that time, students were such ardent fans of the Wildcats that Camp Out was each Wednesday in January and February and carried through to the weekend so that the die-hard fans who braved the freezing temperatures could guarantee themselves seats at the next game.

Those were wicked times, though. The social fabric of the country was being pulled in so many directions at once that it began to tear. Camp Outs in those times were characterized by alcohol, fights and a few rapes. It was a time when we defeated the University of Kansas and students would lay waste to campus. That was when someone set fire to Nichols Hall.

Like the Wabash Cannonball, K-State rose from the devastation of the late sixties and early seventies. In the 1980s, the Camp Out continued because the student body did not want to go to a lottery system of ticket distribution; in those days, there was debate on the most fair way of distributing basketball tickets. At that time, Student Senate ran the Camp Out, and to ensure that it ran smoothly, there was a standing committee in charge of the event, backed by a hefty funding base.

As the basketball team's successes gave way to those of the K-State football program and KU basketball became dominant, enthusiasm for basketball waned. Student Senate passed the Camp Out to the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics because, at that time, Senate didn't see any reason for it to continue.

The athletic department, on the other hand, saw the Camp Out as a prime opportunity to draw attention to the basketball program and to turn a tradition with a soiled past into something positive.

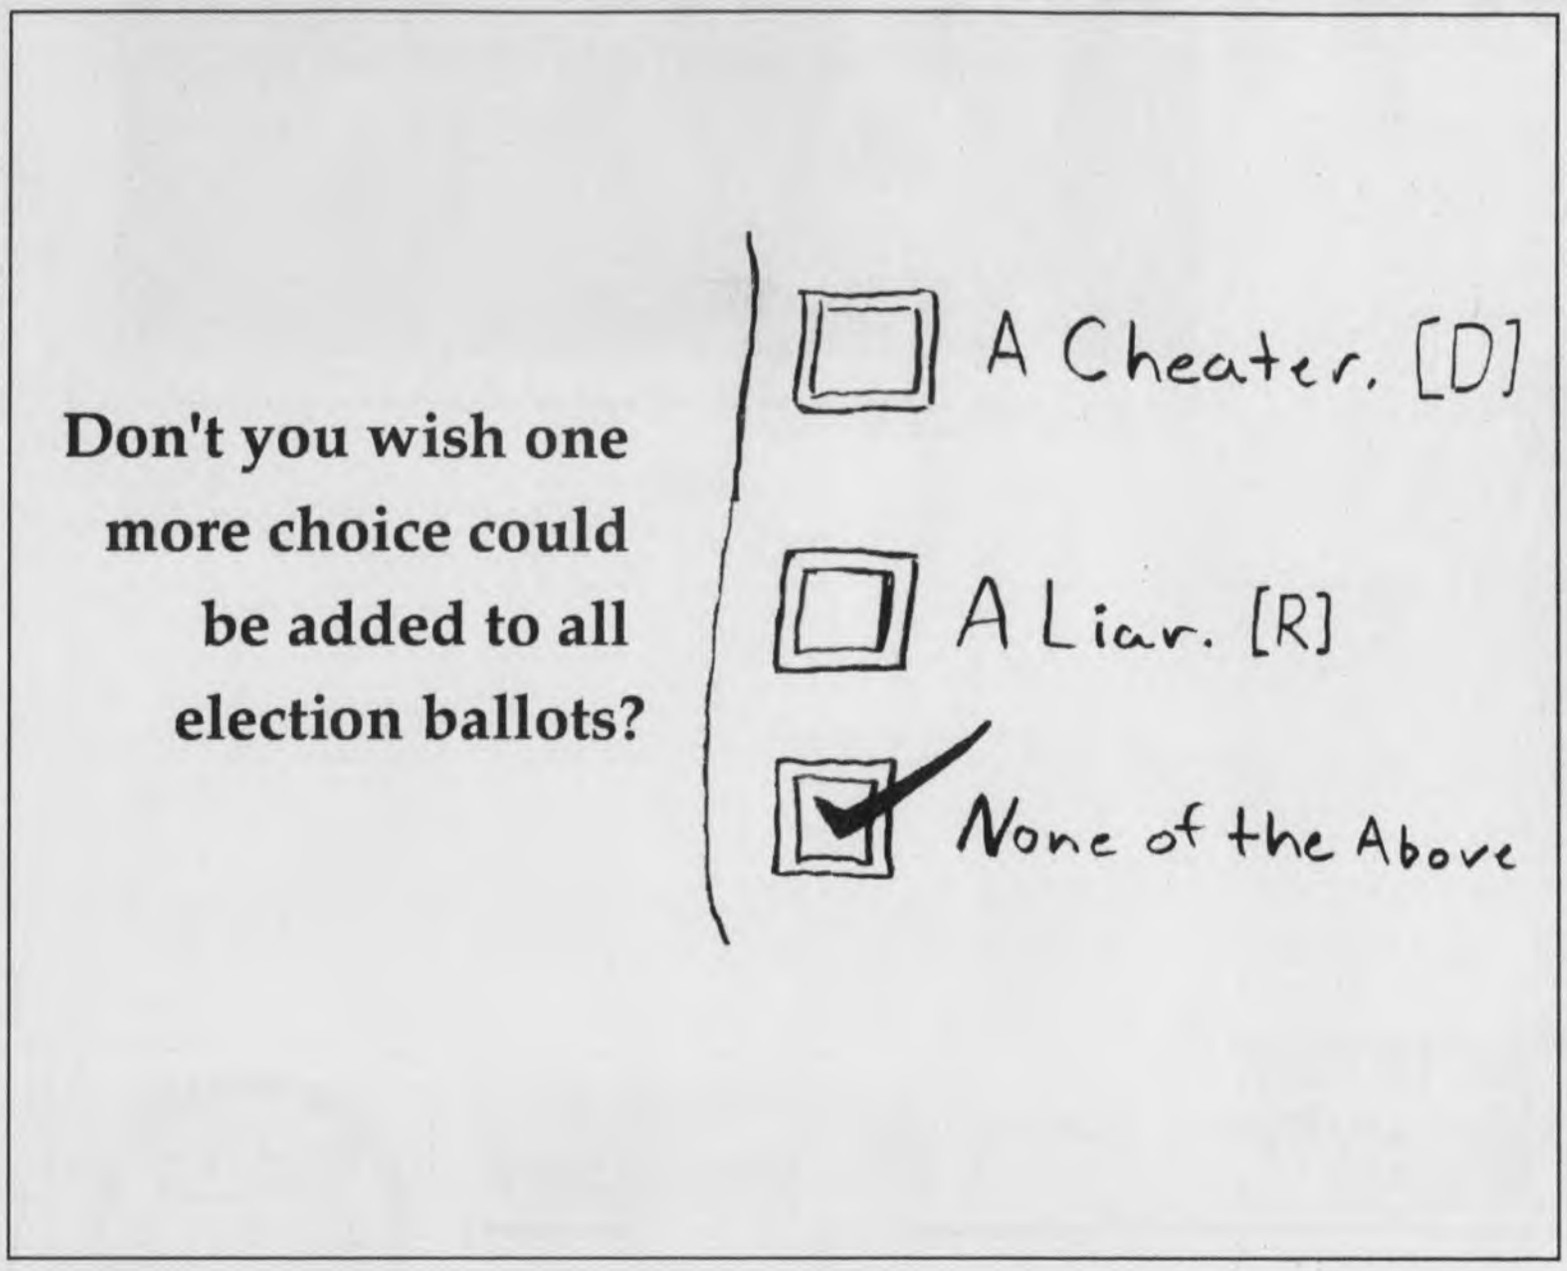
This year, they did a terrific job of pulling that off.

Many believe the Camp Out serves no purpose — we went to a lottery system of distribution several years ago — but it keeps an athletic tradition alive, and it builds spirit. The Camp Out starts the basketball season on a much better foot than the lackluster line at Bramlage for football tickets. At Ahearn, you are much closer to your classes, and you can buy 20 tickets at once, so that a group of people can rotate their time in line and go to class.

The lottery keeps the seating priority fair, but it also allows groups of friends to sit together — so people should feel more comfortable about cheering.

This year, the basketball team had to ride the coattails of the football team a bit, but it didn't disappoint the people who came to support it. Basketball players were out in force at the Camp Out, talking to people, distributing T-shirts, scrimmaging, challenging others to free-throw contests, etc. There was pizza for participants, and it was easy to see that quite a bit of effort went into the event.

The only thing that might have been done better was the job of publicizing the Camp Out. Admittedly, however, some of that responsibility falls into our lap here at the Collegian.



The Camp Out was so overwhelmingly successful and left many with such a good feeling that it is hard not to feel positive about the coming season.

That feeling alone is enough to justify continuing this tradition.

We applaud the athletic department for doing such a good job, and we hope to see continued success in the future.

OUR VIEW, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and other staff members. OUR VIEW is the Collegian's official opinion.

NOTHING EXCITES A GIRL MORE THAN WATCHING A MAN AS...

He drinks a whiskey drink. He drinks a vodka drink. He drinks a lager drink. He drinks a cider drink.

VIEWPOINT

NICOLE TWIGG

Everyone should drink copious amounts of alcohol. Liquor is great for handling problems, and it makes you look cool in front of your friends. The medical field should support it, because it strengthens your liver.

Alcohol can be found at most college parties (any decent party has at least 10 kegs), bars sell alcohol, and most college students have fully stocked liquor cabinets. Therefore, finding this panacea is not a problem. The government tries to tell the public that alcohol is bad (by putting age restrictions on such silly things as carrying alcohol, pouring alcohol or the most ludicrous of all — not letting anyone drive a simple little machine like a car if they've had so much as a single beer). We know they just want more for themselves.

Besides, everybody knows the government's sole mission is to control everything Americans say and do.

Drinking lots of alcohol is really great. Everybody knows that if you drink enough of it, all your problems will disappear.

Besides, it's not like your problems still will be there in the morning or afternoon, once you've sobered up. For instance, guys — if your girlfriend has just broken up with you, about 10 shots of Jim Beam whiskey will help you realize what a drag she was anyway.

Maybe your boss just fired you for coming to work drunk or maybe for passing out at your desk. Once your stomach starts to warm up like a bonfire and your gums begin to go numb, you'll remember how much you hated working for minimum wage. You were going to quit that job anyway.

So you just flunked an important test. Who cares if it was required for your major? Here's a simple solution: Change your major. A few beers will remind you how much you hated getting up for that 8:05.

So you just flunked an important test. Who cares if it was required for your major? Here's a simple solution: Change your major. A few beers will remind you how much you hated getting up for that 8:05.

In addition, taking tequila shots (the ones where you lick some salt, take the shot, then suck on a lime) makes even Joe Shmoe look cool. Girls in particular are ALWAYS impressed when a guy is so drunk he only staggers and can't walk at all. They especially love it when men are rude to them and show lots of aggression, like starting fights and breaking things.

Gals — guys think you are the coolest when you pass out in a bar, or better yet, the middle of the dance floor at KJ' s... "Sallie Sue is the prettiest girl I've ever seen in my whole drunken haze of a life, at least the parts I remember" ... Yeah, (hiccup) I find that glazed-eye look soooo attractive." ... Do you guys think it hurts her to get stepped on like that?"

Last but not least, alcohol is healthy for your body. When somebody stresses and eventually breaks down a muscle, like from a tough workout, the muscle grows back stronger than it was before. So it only follows that alcohol strengthens the liver. Even though countless medical journals and doctors have informed the public that alcohol hurts the liver, they're just in with the government. Down with Big Brother! Everybody with half a brain can figure out that the drunken liver will grow back stronger than ever and ready for more alcohol.

Alcohol is the panacea for the new millennium! Business people "wine and dine" by the millions. Show them you are ready to enter the business world. Who cares if your dog ran away? What's the big deal if you are flunking out of college? Just take a few shots of Absolut; you'll feel much better. Alcohol cures all, fixes all and mends all, so stock up and tip it back.

U.S. environmental crisis nearing scary proportions

VIEWPOINT

CHRIS PIATT

When Bebe Neuwirth wanted to leave the cast of "Cheers," the show's writers sent her character, the chalk-white Dr. Lilith Crane, to live in an eco pod. It was a clean break, and the word "eco pod" just sounded funny. I guess there's something comical in people who take nature seriously.

A good friend of mine is working at a real eco pod. It's a great big important one, too. My friend Crystal is spending a semester at Biosphere II, outside of Tucson, Ariz. She and 49 other students were admitted to conduct research and explore bioethics. She and I spoke on the phone for an hour last week, and the conversation was startling.

The Biosphere itself is a huge dome that consists of several ecosystems, including a rain forest, a desert and an ocean. It is home to countless species of animals. It is government-funded, obviously, and scientists from all over the globe converge there for research.

That's not the scary part.

The original concept of Biosphere was that humans eventually will need artificial habitats for colonization.

Translation: We're screwing up the Earth so badly that the government was considering, if only briefly, sending us to live on the moon.

Permanently.

Crystal is working at Biosphere II. This name implies that there is more than one. The project costs millions to create and maintain and is yet to be abandoned. The rational thinker knows that even America's imperialism is limited at least to this planet. So why the continued existence of these biodomes? Shouldn't they have gone out of vogue with bomb shelters?

The conspiracy theorist in me wants to believe these eco pods are part of some sinister government plot, just waiting to be exposed by "60 Minutes" or Oliver Stone (Crystal says there are cameras everywhere, recording their every move).

However, assessment of the situation at hand forces one to take this a bit more seriously and consider the big picture.

We're running out of space to put out stuff. Even with current recycling efforts, trash is piling up everywhere, both in structured, organized settings, like landfills, and in unstructured, everyday settings. There's crap everywhere.

We're running out of fossil fuels. The dinosaurs decomposed and turned into petroleum, which was great, but now we've almost used them all up. There won't be any more petroleum until we decompose.

We're running out of time. Americans have a personal sense of time. If we aren't on time for work, we get fired. If we turn on the television late, we miss the whole plot of the show. However, there is no collective sense of greater time. A massive biological clock is ticking, and we can't hear it.

One day, all the trash cans will be full, so we won't be able to throw anything away, and all the gas pumps will be empty, so we won't be able to go anywhere. We'll just have to sit around in our own garbage.

It's going to suck.

My favorite sci-fi flick is "The Day the Earth Stood Still." It's an old black-and-white film about aliens coming to Earth. Naturally, we try to shoot them. Come to find out, an intergalactic ambassador has come to threaten Earthlings because our destructive habits are a threat to an otherwise peaceful galaxy. I hate to be a deserter, but I'm siding with the aliens.

My friend told me that working at Biosphere II has been a life-altering experience. She saidenvironmental policy should be at the forefront of the international political scene because we're running out of time.

We're running out of time.

WILL THE REAL MICHAEL BISHOP PLEASE STEP FORWARD?

K-State's starting quarterback has a name that's a dime a dozen

VIEWPOINT

D. SCOTT FRITCHEN

Michael Bishop is white.

It's true. Really. He has dusty brown hair, stubble around his face and wears Levis. I met him Sunday afternoon, and he seemed pretty nice for somebody who has spent 22 years dealing with a severe case of mistaken identity.

Poor Michael. He can't win.

You see, he's four minutes older than his twin brother, Brad. They're always confusing people. For starters, they're roommates.

Both are also computer science majors at K-State.

But Michael's problem runs much deeper these days.

He also happens to share a name with a pretty popular quarterback in the Midwest.

For the past two years, he's politely told people he cannot throw a football 93 yards. He's received between 20 and 30 e-mail messages during his final semester from drooling fans telling him he's a great quarterback, he is simply the best football player they've ever seen, and, oh, by the way, Michael Bishop, if you have a minute, could you please send me an autographed picture?

Some messages are short. A couple are long. A high school football coach told Michael his life story and requested an autographed picture to inspire his team. A grade school friend wanted to rekindle ties with the quarterback. A girl revealed a couple unmentionable thoughts that she felt might lure Michael to meet her. She also wanted his number.

Michael responded: "I think you have the wrong guy."

Then added: "His number is seven."

Amusing? Yes. Frustrating? Sometimes.

Michael forwards the fans' messages to Michael Paul Bishop, the Heisman Trophy candidate everybody wants to know, then deletes the messages. Never have the two met. (I don't know what I would say, "Nice to meet myself?") Seldom has Michael seen the quarterback in public. (He's usually walking away when someone says, "Oh, there's Michael Bishop.") There's always confusion when answering phones. ("Are you sure you're Michael Bishop?")

Michael didn't appreciate the newspaper reporter who disturbed him late one night for an interview. He looked at his clock. It read 12:30 a.m.

When his alarm clock broke, he pulled out his Mastercard at Sears to purchase a new one but couldn't leave before signing the receipt — and an autograph for a persistent fan.

"The cashier said, 'It's going to be worth a lot of money some day and so are you,'" Michael chuckled. "I said, 'Yes, but not for the reasons you think!'"

There's more.

Meet Dr. Michael Bishop, 39, an oncologist at the University of Nebraska Medical Center in Lincoln, Neb. He's one of three Michael Bishops listed in Nebraska. He's used to showing up to work Monday mornings during football season to remarks about his weekend performance. You won't see him in Manhattan on Nov. 14, though.

"I'm a Big 10 fan," he said. "Go Illini."

Reading about himself is an absolute trip, although Michael Bishop, 42, of Lincoln, Kan., swears he's never been to a K-State football game. Michael has constructed machine parts for 20 years at Cashco Inc. Although he watches televised games when possible, this weekend he was busy constructing a basement.

"The game I'll be watching is on Nov. 14," he said. He was quoted as saying he'll throw it 80 yards on the first play.

Michael Bishop also lives in Auderghem, Belgium, and has the most understanding wife for insensitive American sportswriters who call at 4:08 a.m. to ask her husband a few questions about NCAA football.

"I assure you he doesn't have anything to do with American sports," she said like an exhausted Julie Andrews. "Please let me have your name and number, though. This all sounds quite a bit interesting."

Michael Bishop never has followed American football. At least that's what the 25-year-old in Calgary, Alberta, says. Football is a yawn. Hand him a hockey stick. His favorite professional football team is the Dallas Cowboys.

But he's heard of Kansas — "It's one of the south states, right?"

Obviously, Alberta U. lacks both football knowledge and geography courses.

There are 498 Michael Bishops listed in the United States according to one Internet source and 114 more in the United Kingdom. Michael Bishop also is listed in Spain, Germany, 29 listings in Canada, and 47 listings in Texas. Michael Bishop lives an hour from Canton, Ohio. Michael Bishop lives a few miles from UCLA.

To my knowledge, only one is a quarterback on a college football team.

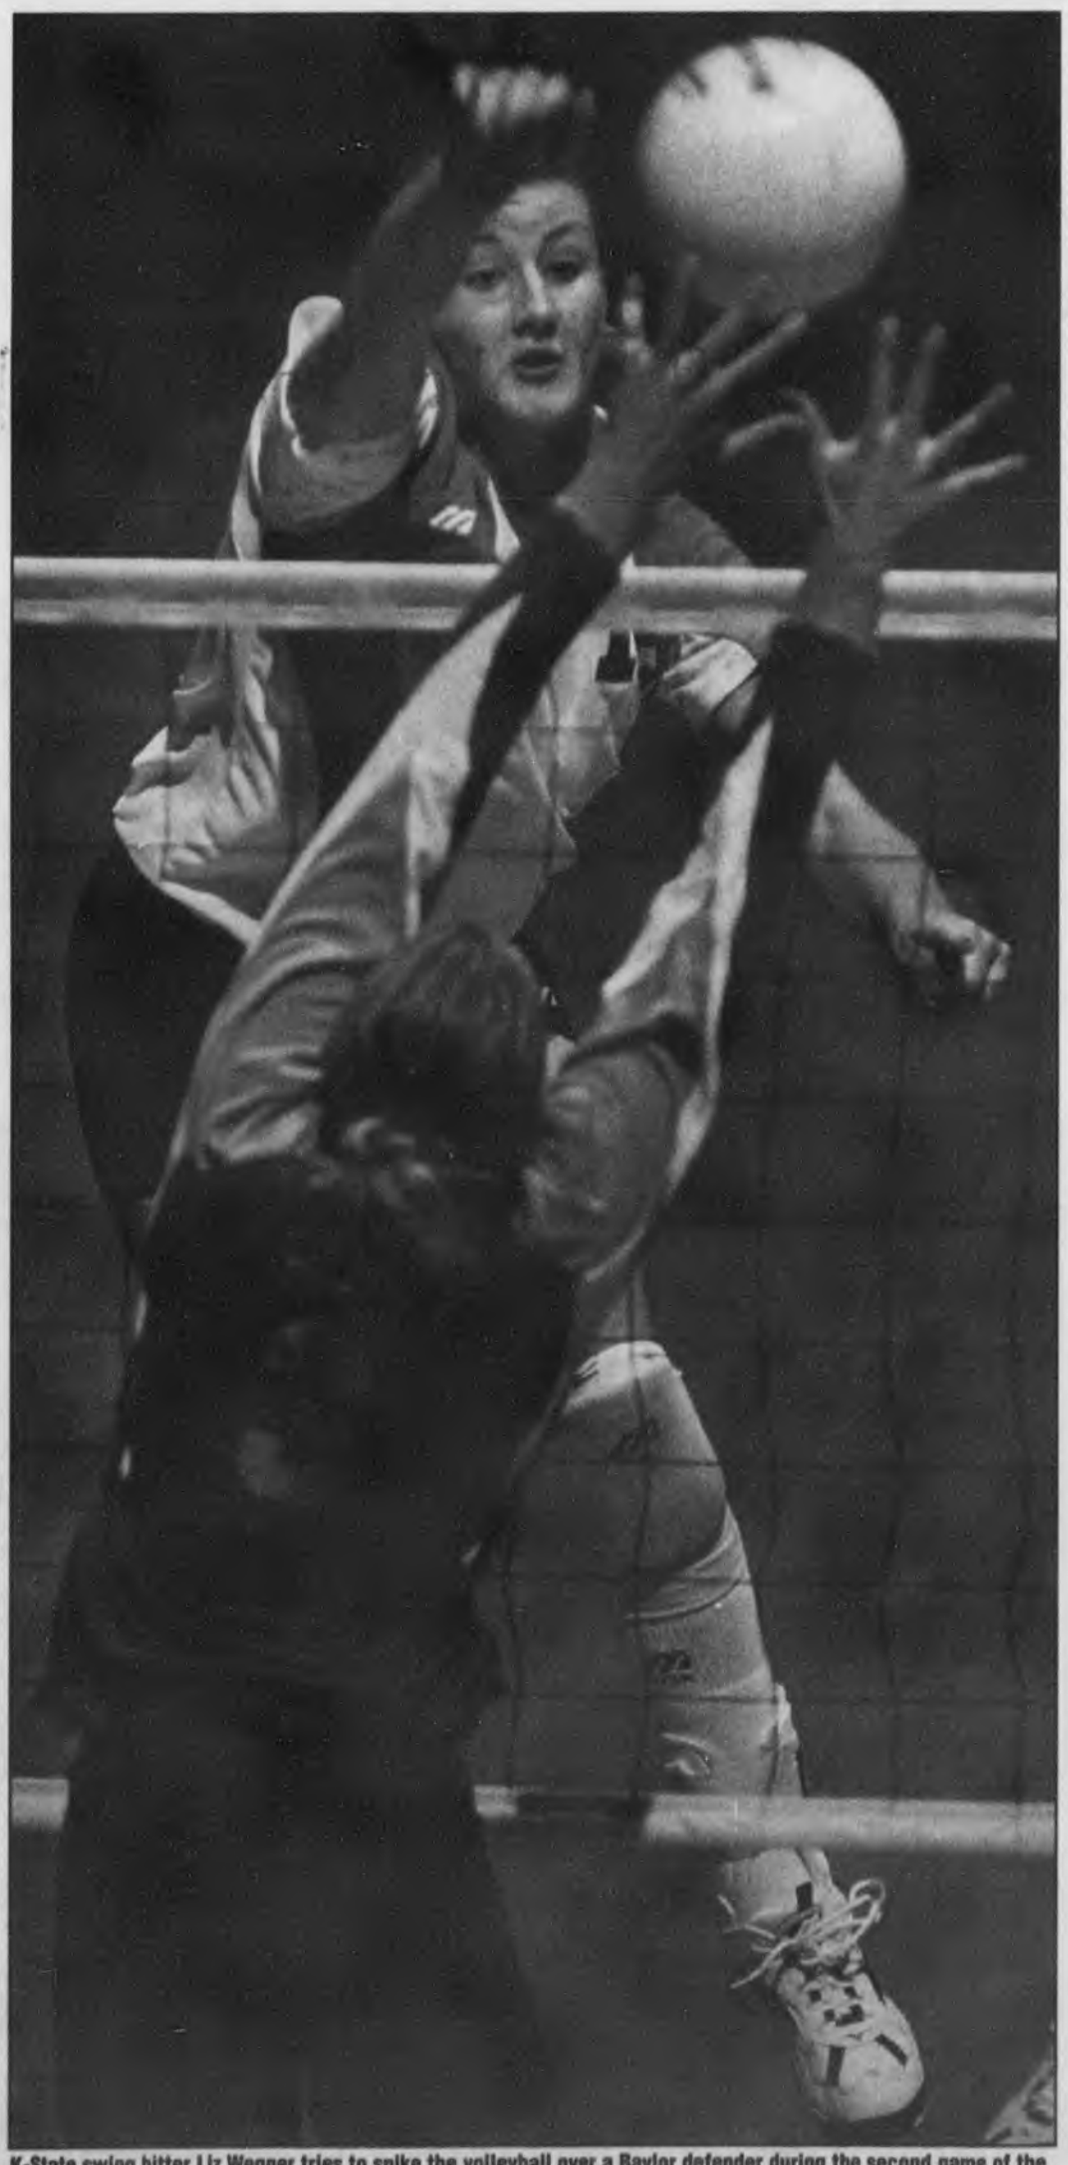
Try telling that to our friend, Michael, who continues to suffer from a campuswide identity problem. He hears "MICHAELLLL BISHH-HOPPP!" blare across Manhattan during football games, and chills run up his spine.

"I'm still not used to it," he said. "It's still too weird."

Michael is having fun with this identity problem now. He smiles while talking about it. Don't be surprised if he wears a BISHOP jersey this weekend. Physical appearance aside, Michael admits, it wouldn't be much of a stretch.

"My older brother knows sports and heard two years ago about this quarterback named Michael Bishop coming to K-State," Michael said.

"This year I'm going to watch the NFL Draft to see if they pick me."



Stay tuned.

The K-State volleyball team could not have scripted it better.

Last weekend, the Cats proved worthy of their No. 23 ranking with a couple of hard-fought three-game sweeps in Big 12 Conference play.

And they did it all in front of the home crowd after two straight weekends on the road.

"It was nice to be home and get to sleep in our own beds and not have to travel," sophomore Kelle Branting said. "Mentally, it was reviving."

K-State opened the weekend with a 3-0 win over the Baylor Bears.

The Cats dominated each of the first two games with 15-10 and 15-7 victories, respectively.

"We just kept the pressure on them and wouldn't take it off," Wildcat coach Jim McLaughlin said.

Game 3 was a bit tighter, but K-State pulled out a 15-13 win to preserve the match.

Senior Kim Zschau led the Cats, hitting .385, while recording 19 kills and 14 digs.

Freshman Disney Bronnenberg dished out 51 assists for K-State, the eighth-highest total in school history for a three-game match.

Saturday night, the Wildcats shocked 26th-ranked Texas Tech with another sweep.

However, in a match that took nearly two hours, the score really didn't tell the entire story.

Following a 15-8 win in game 1 and a 15-12 win in game 2, the third game was a grueling battle. After going back and forth the whole game, K-State finally pulled out a 17-15 victory.

"Even when we made some errors early, we stayed aggressive, and the aggressiveness helped us win the match," McLaughlin said.

Texas Tech's strength all season has been the play of its middle blockers. However, K-State controlled the middle and caused the Red Raiders to try something different.

"We forced them to beat us outside," McLaughlin said. "And their outside hitters were good but just not good enough."

Zschau again led the Cats with 17 kills and 19 digs. She hit .410 for the match and made plays that mesmerized her coach at the same time.

"She played the best defense I've ever seen her play," McLaughlin said. "She made moves that I haven't seen very many volleyball players make."

Bronnenberg put up 59 assists for the match and added 11 digs.

"Disney was very aggressive," McLaughlin said. "She wasn't placing it. She was just getting behind it and setting it."

McLaughlin said K-State played the match more consistent than he's seen them play all season.

"We played better than they did at the toughest parts of the match," McLaughlin said. "We made the plays in critical situations, and they didn't."

The Wildcats are home again this weekend for a pair of Big 12 contests. K-State takes on the University of Texas on Friday night and Texas A&M on Saturday night.

4-1 decision gives Tyson license back

BY TIM DAHLBERG
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS — Mike Tyson won the biggest split decision of his life. Now, with the help of a certain former basketball player, he could be back in the ring before the year ends.

"I'm just happy I won," Tyson said after the Nevada Athletic Commission voted 4-1 Monday to return the license it revoked when he bit Evander Holyfield's ears 15 months ago.

With Magic Johnson and Muhammad Ali backing him up, Tyson seemed near tears upon learning he would be allowed to return from his boxing exile.

He promised to put his life in order as he prepares to return to the sport he loves and the heavyweight division he once terrorized.

When he does, Johnson says he will replace the spiky-haired Don King as Tyson's new promoter and help guide the career and troubled personal life of the 32-year-old former heavyweight champion.

"I'll be the closest guy to him, making all the decisions," Johnson said.

The first decision will be when Tyson fights again. He could box at a Las Vegas casino as early as Dec. 5, although Johnson said it will not be against a top opponent.

"We're going to be bringing Mike along very slowly," Johnson said. "Don't be looking for him to be fighting these champions."

It was a contrite and thoroughly humbled Tyson who appeared before the commission Monday in a repeat of a hearing a month ago that went on for six hours before commissioners ordered psychological tests for Tyson before making a decision.

This time, though, it was a far different atmosphere as Tyson sat with his wife, Monica, and lawyer, Jim Jimmerson before the five-member panel. Gone were other attorneys who presented the case in the first meeting and adviser Shelly Finkel, who irritated the commission by trying to get licensed in New Jersey in August.

Tyson and his wife both spoke to the commission instead of the lawyers. Johnson then gave a plea and Ali's wife, Lonnie, read a statement from her husband, who sat trembling next to her.

"I have made many mistakes in my lifetime that cost me dearly," Ali said in the statement. "Let this young man earn a living. Give him a chance to redeem himself in the ring."

In the end, the commission did just that.

"Mike, you have made a lot of mistakes in your life," commission chairman Dr. Elias Ghanem said. "I know that sometimes you think you're a victim. But let me tell you, that most of your problems are of your own making. You and you alone have to take responsibility for your life."

After the vote, Ghanem warned Tyson that he was getting his last break from the panel.

"If Mike Tyson has more troubles in the ring that are of his own making, I guarantee you he'll never fight in the state of Nevada again," Ghanem said. "This is one chance only."

PLANT LIFE

Right amounts of sunlight, water make healthy friends for students

BY ERIN MCGLINN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Plants need proper care in order to thrive and help create the calming atmosphere they are often known for creating.

Lesa Sailor of the Blueville Nursery said sunlight is the main problem associated with maintaining the life of a plant.

"In most cases, the plant suffers because it does not receive sufficient sunlight, not because of a lack of water," she said. "The caretaker needs to designate a place where plenty of sunlight can reach the plant."

Sailor also said she encourages growers to fertilize their plants.

"During the active growing season, which is from about March to October, fertilization should take place about once a month, sometimes more depending on plant size," she said.

Sailor said that, depending on plant size and sunlight, plants should be watered whenever they need it. Because there is less sunlight in the winter due to shorter days, plants do not require huge amounts of water in the cold season. Sailor said there is a general rule to follow for watering plants.

"Stick your finger about an inch down in the soil. If the soil is moist, no water is needed. If the soil is dry, water is needed," she said.

"While actually watering the plant, the water should run through the entire pot and let it soak into the saucer of the pot for about an hour. That way everything has had ample time to absorb needed nutrients."

Salt build-ups can occur in the soil and damage the livelihood of the greenery. In this situation, Sailor said, it is best to flush the plant out by placing it under a gentle stream of water in the sink for about 10 minutes. All impurities can be freed in this manner.

Sailor said a neutral, attractive plant that would be easy for an active college student to care for is the green, heart-shape-leafed plant called philodendron. Because it requires little sunlight or water, philodendron is a plant that thrives on neglect.

Amy Sell, senior in horticultural therapy, said she believes the pathos is one of the easiest plants to grow. The pathos, a cousin of the philodendron, displays more color with its variegated yellow-and-white leaves and also requires little sunlight or water, she said.

Overall, Sell said she believes outdoors plants are the most enjoyable and easiest to care for because the natural environment serves as the best nurturing system.

"I like to plant outdoors, because by planting the seed, you can watch the entire life cycle take place before your eyes under the natural sunlight and rain," she said. "Also, this provides room for the gardener to create their very own design area. It is very refreshing to see sprouts pop up from bulbs in the spring after a long winter."

Besides the obvious beauty that accompanies plants, Sell said there are other benefits to the leafy green products of nature.

"Plants clean the air and give off oxygen," she said. "When you study next to a plant, your concentration is more effective because that oxygen is reaching your brain and helps avoid drowsiness."

Sell said she also has learned in classes that green is the most stimulating, calming color the brain recognizes, which means plants cause a feeling of tranquility whenever they are in view.

Through proper sunlight, fertilizing and watering care of a plant, one can experience the benefits and joy of owning a plant.

Attractive woman can't find date; thoughtless deserves to be dumped

The ugly reality of being beautiful

Dear Harlan,

I'm a 24-year-old female who is a size 6 and everything else that is considered beautiful and gorgeous. By today's standards, I am perfect. Believe it or not, I never have been on a date or had a boyfriend. The only man who ever asked me out was a movie star.

People leer at me like I'm a freak. No one wants to talk to me, other females don't want to be my friend and worst of all, I've never had a date.

It seems the only girls with boyfriends are the ones who aren't drop-dead gorgeous. They're not as intimidating and people get to know them for their personalities. I'm constantly singled out, solely on the basis of looks. It makes me feel like a piece of meat.

Ask any model who is not famous, and she will understand. Contrary to popular belief, if you're attractive and shy, it's like hanging an anchor of loneliness around your neck.

—Pretty lonely

Dear Pretty lonely,

They say the smaller the bikini on the body, the heavier the anchor around the neck.

I already can tell from your letter that I'm going to get flooded with e-mails and letters from intrigued men hungry for your information. For those looking for a name and number, I don't have it. According to this girl, there are many more shy and beautiful women aching for a simple "hello."

While people might pass judgment, no one has put an anchor around your neck. Being shy and being beautiful is no excuse to remain lonely. If you can't find the courage to approach a man, you must move forward and explore all of your options. You have to set your own sail for a happier place.

Today, there are online dating services, lunch dating services, even religious dating services; there are many options for normal, healthy and beautiful people to make new friends every day.

Being beautiful might be brutal, but you don't have to do it all alone. If this loneliness persists, you might be suffering from a little depression. Never hesitate to get help.

—Harlan

How to understand negative boyfriend

Dear Harlan,

I had this boyfriend who always was saying negative things to me. I was nice and understanding to this guy. He never took me out to eat, to a movie or anything.

Harlan, I thought my ex-boyfriend would be glad he had a nice, intelligent woman who was trying to further her education.

My ex-boyfriend came to my house about four times in three years. I think I don't deserve being treated like this. Last year, he didn't even tell me he was leaving. He was gone for a year and seven months.

Please tell me the best way to understand this past relationship.

—Not worried

Dear Worried,

Not only was he abusive and disrespectful, he was also cheap.

You might not be worried, but I'm pretty concerned. Never allow yourself to be involved with such a horrible relationship.

Maybe this is about a poor self-image. Perhaps this is how you define love. Whatever way you look at this relationship, it sounds terribly unhealthy.

If you discover this is happening again, get out there and get some help.

PJ Harvey's albums deserve appreciation

■ Newcomers to Harvey's music might need time for adjustment

BY DAVID PANJADA
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the 21st century approaches, few truly innovative musicians have emerged from the rubble of grunge.

Fortunately, Polly Jean Harvey never has wavered from the formula that demands respect from musicians and fans alike. Harvey is possibly the most underappreciated musician of the '90s.

Music Review
out of 5 stars

Although virtually ignored by radio, Harvey consistently has released critically acclaimed albums, from her early "4-Track Demos" to the 1995 masterpiece "To Bring You My Love." "Is This Desire?" continues this trend.

Following the same formula that fueled her last album, "Desire?" is filled with dark, manic moods that create an aura of desperation and adoration.

Focusing on themes of scorned love, undying passion and lost lovers, Harvey delivers the same experience as her previous works.

On "The Wind," Harvey demonstrates all of the elements that prove her genius: a staggering fusion of soprano over whispery vocals, strings, echoes and a driving bass line.

"My Beautiful Leah" proves to be creepier than anything Marilyn Manson could produce, while maintaining a unique beauty. Over a fuzzed-out bass line, Harvey moans, "If I don't find it this time, then I'm better off dead."

Harvey fans will find "Desire?" to be a more than adequate addition to her discography, while newcomers may need more time to adjust to Harvey's manic breed of music.

from the scene.

"I hope it doesn't go clear to the back," Jones said as she watched the fire. "I need something else to wear besides this."

But the fire spread to the east end of the home, destroying everything but the living room and kitchen. A neighbor, Ed Hughes, said he didn't hear anything until fire crews arrived but then rushed out to make sure Jones wasn't injured.

"I got out of the shower, and my dog was kind of raising hell by the door," Hughes said. "I hurried up and put my robe on and looked out and saw these trucks out here.

"I just wanted to make sure she got out OK," he said.

Collins said he believed the home was owned by J.J. Jones, who is Lois Jones' son. J.J. Jones owns the other homes in the Priboth Road trailer court,but could not be reached for confirmation.

A neighbor, Ed Hughes, said he didn't hear anything until fire crews arrived but then rushed out to make sure Jones wasn't injured.

Collins said Jones did the right thing by calling 911 before she tried to put out the fire herself.

"She did the right thing. She called 911 and got out, and then she tried to stretch the garden hose and work on the fire herself. The hose was about 5 feet too short to do any good, but at least she got outside and tried to do something."

K-State student ambassador elections begin today

The Collegian editorial board says this election should not be a popularity contest. See Page 4.

BY KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In 1972, K-State had an interesting addition to its annual Homecoming Queen competition — a man.

Steven "Panther" Schuessler was nominated by his residence hall to take home the crown during halftime of the football game.

Although he didn't make it to the semi-finals, his nomination would be the first and last in the queen competition. 1972 marked the last Homecoming Queen race for K-State. In 1977, the K-State Ambassador program began and created a new kind of competition based on other things besides beauty.

"The Alumni Association started the ambassador program because we felt it was important to always have a student representative for the campus," said Heather Lansdowne, assistant director of alumni programs and chair of the All-University Homecoming Committee.

Dissatisfaction with the queen competition ultimately created the student ambassador program.

Prior to the creation of the ambassador program, Lansdowne said a student would be picked, or the current student body president or vice president would travel with alumni as a representative of the campus.

"We felt that it was important to have a representative that the students actually selected to be their representative," she said.

Stan Watt, now senior vice president of First Savings Bank of Manhattan, was one of the first student ambassadors in 1977, along with Sheri Hildebrand. As an agricultural economics major, Watt said he was encouraged to apply by friends because of his leadership activities.

"It is an excellent program because of the student and campus leadership opportunities and the outreach capabilities at recruitment events," he said.

Watt said his duties as an ambassador were somewhat restricted because the program was new. However, his experiences as a representative of the university were exciting and worthwhile.

"It was not only a great honor to be selected, but exciting to represent K-State around Kansas. It is simply a lot of fun and a great opportunity," he said.

The application process to become an ambassador hasn't changed much in the past 20 years. Students complete a written application and then interview with a committee of student leaders, including the present ambassadors. An interview with a committee of faculty and alumni is next in the process. Then, applicants give a three- to five-minute presentation on the Homecoming theme.

After the interviews, the candidate field is narrowed to five or six candidates, but Lansdowne said there is no limit to the number of finalists.

Elections are today through Friday of Homecoming week.

Sara Reser, a current ambassador, said being a student ambassador is one of the best positions to have on campus.

"As an ambassador, you get to travel around and meet college deans and other

Gubernatorial candidates wage clean campaigns

BY LEW FERGUSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Editorialists, the League of Women Voters and Vote Smart condemn negative, non-issue campaigning, yet Kansans might be wondering whether a little acrimony between Bill Graves and Tom Sawyer might have spiced up this fall's gubernatorial race.

Graves, it seems, has been sleepwalking to re-election during a gentlemanly campaign that has focused on issues — most of them raised by Sawyer. It has generated none of the bitterness that enveloped Graves and his Republican primary challenger, David Miller, last summer.

The fall campaign has raised a question in some people's minds whether nice equals dull, and whether a challenger who takes the high road has much chance of getting the public's attention.

Some are predicting a record low voter turnout on Nov. 3.

Part of the problem, both camps say, is none of the other statewide

Commissioners open meeting in new office

BY SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In its first meeting within the renovated City Hall, the Manhattan City Commission celebrated its new office and re-tabled a proposed ordinance after much debate Tuesday night.

The meeting began with a formal welcome by Mayor Steve Hall and included an invocation by former mayor Richard Hayter.

A video presentation featured the previous incarnations of Manhattan's city halls, from the original 1890 building on Third Street up to the present building at 1101 Poyntz Ave.

The current building, built in 1955, has been under reconstruction since October 1997 and reopened Oct. 12 after moving offices back from temporary placement in Manhattan Town Center and the Headquarters Fire Station.

Commissioners each gave comments of approval for the new building, particularly their new meeting spot.

"It's really inspiring to be up here, but I think the word that really fits this tonight is 'Wow,'" Commissioner Ed Klimek said.

Following the ribbon-cutting ceremony to dedicate the new building, commissioners approved housekeeping matters from the last legislative session and attended to the two agenda items.

The second item, a request by city administration for the com-

Paula Jones's lawyer asks to revive Clinton lawsuit

BY LARRY MARGASAK
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. PAUL, Minn. — Amid sharp and detailed questioning by the judges, Paula Jones's lawyer pleaded with a federal appeals court Tuesday to revive her sexual harassment lawsuit and send a message that President Clinton cannot "commit perjury again and again."

The president's lawyer countered that Clinton's original testimony about Monica Lewinsky — which Clinton acknowledges was misleading — is irrelevant. Attorney Amy Sabrin also accused Jones' lawyers of using the Lewinsky controversy to "try any case but the Paula Jones case."

The arguments before a three-judge panel of the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals were made in the long shadow of ongoing negotiations to settle the lawsuit, which already has prompted an impeachment inquiry of the president.

"Why would we settle? It is to get it behind us. The American people want President Clinton to concentrate on the problems of this country," Robert Bennett, Clinton's lead lawyer, said outside the courthouse.

He said he would consider a settlement offer that did not include "strings attached," unlike the latest idea from the Jones camp which would have combined money from the president with $1 million from a New York real estate investor.

One of Jones' lawyers, Donovan Campbell Jr., signaled a new offer might be ahead. "Our office expects to be in touch with Mr. Bennett over the next several days and perhaps thereafter," he said.

26 K-State video-game junkies packed the Union vying for a championship and a trip to a regional competition.

Football long snapper earns PlayStation video-game championship

BY NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Long snapper Brandon Knowles proved he can play college football both on Wagner Field and in living rooms.

Knowles won the EA Sports NCAA Football '99 PlayStation tournament in Union Station on Tuesday night.

A fourth-quarter interception sealed his tournament win. Knowles said it was a nice opportunity for him to get out and interact with students on campus.

"Me and James Garcia came here not expecting to win, but I was lucky and had a couple of good wins and kept on going," Knowles said.

Twenty-six Sony PlayStation players also brought their best games to the competition.

"I never play conservative, and I pull up fourth and goal from the one," Shad Shapland, freshman in open-option, said. "I figured I would play it right and kick a field goal, and I missed."

Shapland said he knew after the missed kick that the game was over. After his game, Shapland, like any coach, critiqued his performance.

"I have one play that I run and I get a guy open every time," Shapland said. "I have had 10 people in, and they challenge my play, and none of them can beat it.

"But for some reason, I just totally lost concentration and left it in the wind," he said.

As the night wore on, the players grew tense, and the occasional expletive filled the room. Defeated players looked on eagerly, thinking about their missed opportunities as those still playing became more intense.

"I will be back for basketball," said Wes Wright, freshman in secondary education, referring to the possible basketball tournament next spring.

Knowles said he is unsure if he will be able to compete at a regional competition in the future because of conflicts with football. K-State is still in season and looks to be preparing for postseason play at the time of regionals.

In that case, runner-up Jason Bruce, senior in elementary education, would take Knowles' place in the regional competition.

"I haven't really thought about it, but if he doesn't get to go, I will gladly go," Bruce said.

The tournament is stopping at 32 Division I schools nationwide. Jeff Luhr, a production assistant for EA Sports, said every conference is represented. The winners of the 32 tournaments will be flown to two regional competition sites. The West Coast Regional will be in Redwood City, Calif., and the East Coast Regional will be in Orlando, Fla.

Two winners from each regional competition will be flown to Tempe, Ariz., to compete in the national championship on Jan. 4.

Luhr said the tournament also is organized to recruit PlayStation players as potential EA Sports interns.

Cindy Higgins of Eudora, Kan., is helping out with the tournament as it moves across the Midwest region. She said it is interesting to watch the different participants play.

"Everybody is chewing gum," Higgins said. "And they are really intense."

Pro wrestling returns to Fort Riley grounds

The antics and theatrics of professional wrestling are coming to Fort Riley.

King Field House will become a house of pain Friday as stars from the world of professional wrestling climb into the ring.

The main event will be the "Sultan" vs. Brian Knobbs. Knobbs is a former world tag-team champion in World Championship Wrestling. His opponent was voted one of the top heavyweight wrestlers by readers of Pro Wrestling Illustrated.

Other matches include Tom Brandi vs. Chainz and Greg "The Hammer" Valentine vs. Jake "The Snake" Roberts.

Proceeds for the event will go toward improvements to Fort Riley. Jim Westerhaus, Fort Riley sports director, said the promotion with 1-800-COLLECT funds the event, and Fort Riley keeps the event's profits.

Westerhaus said the promotion has toured at least four military bases.

Event organizers said they have not had professional wresting in the past 11 years.

Jan Bradfield, King Field House director, said the military base used to have the All-Star Wrestling promotion.

Bradfield talked about stars of the past such as Bull Dog Bob Brown and Rufus R. Jones as she recounted the days of All-Star Wrestling.

Organizers said the public's response to Wrestle Slam has been good, and as of Monday general admission tickets still were available.

Cathy Aguayo, who works as a travel clerk with Information Ticketing and Registration, said Wrestle Slam has excited lots of sons and fathers.

"Lots of kids and dads are excited," she said. "It has been good."

Bradfield said the doors open at 5:30 p.m., and the wrestling begins at 7 p.m.

Event honors mentors who inspire students

Mortar Board Senior Honorary had a reception Monday afternoon to honor 32 outstanding professors, advisers and mentors of its members.

Carrie Yenne, senior in kinesiology and Mortar Board scholarship committee chair, organized the reception.

Yenne said only professors and advisers were honored last year. Students were given the chance to show their appreciation for their mentors throughout the university committee, honoring faculty they met outside the classroom and the student-adviser relationship.

Mortar Board President Liz Schepmann, senior in family studies and human services, nominated Barbara Anderson. Schepmann knows Anderson through the Community Service Program.

Schepmann said she nominated Anderson because Anderson is a dedicated community servant, something Schepmann said she admires.

Jennyfer Owensby, accounting specialist in the Office of Student Activities and Services, was nominated by Gabe Eckert, senior in agricultural journalism. Eckert had the opportunity to work with Owensby last year when he was treasurer of Student Governing Association.

Owensby said she already knew she was appreciated, but it's nice to hear it.

"This is really special," Owensby said. "It gives students a way to physically and verbally show us how they feel. It's probably the most special thing a student has done."

This was the second year for the reception. Group members said they hope to make it an annual event.

15-year-old to remain in jail until hearing

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — A judge has ordered a teenager charged in the drive-by shooting of a 10-year-old girl to remain in jail until a hearing to determine if he should be tried as an adult.

Attorneys for Curtis Coleman, 15, had asked that he be released to the custody of his parents.

Coleman, charged with first-degree murder in the killing of 10-year-old Shanelle Cooper, will remain in jail until the Nov. 5 hearing under Monday's ruling by Judge Patricia Kalb in Wyandotte County Juvenile Court.

The girl was shot to death Oct. 14 as she walked toward the porch of her Kansas City home. Shots were fired from a car filled with young men who had stopped and allowed Shanelle and a friend to cross the street before the shooting began.

Durand Carson, 20, is charged with aiding a felon and is being kept on $50,000 bond.

Coleman is alleged to have fired the shots from a weapon supplied by Carson.

Authorities said they have been frustrated by a lack of cooperation from witnesses and others who might have information about the shooting.

Investigators speculate the shooting might have been the result of a dispute between Coleman and others in the car and Shanelle's brother, 16-year-old Jason Clark. He is charged with aggravated assault in a Feb. 6 drive-by shooting in which gunshots were aimed at three juveniles outside Wyandotte High School.

Military rules outlaw criticism of president

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Military leaders are reminding troops they must avoid "insulting, rude or disdainful" comments about President Clinton, and that even repeating jokes about the commander in chief and Monica Lewinsky could subject them to prosecution under military law.

The warnings, both official and unofficial, came in response to a spate of newspaper columns and letters to the editor in recent weeks written by military officers with harsh criticisms of Clinton's conduct.

This week, a Marine Corps major denounced Clinton in a column published by the independent newspaper "Navy Times," while an Army colonel criticized the president in a letter to the editor in a similar publication.

"One should call an adulterous liar exactly what he is — a criminal," wrote Maj. Shane Sellers, a 20-year Marine veteran.

In the Air Force, an article explaining the rules has gotten wide e-mail circulation, officials said. It initially was printed in a base newspaper at F.E. Warren Air Force Base in Wyoming.

The base's military justice chief was quoted as saying military law "defines contemptuous language fairly broadly ... (and) it includes language which is insulting, rude or disdainful."

An officer using such language faces a maximum penalty of dismissal, confinement for one year and forfeiture of all pay and allowances. Enlisted men and women face similar restrictions under military regulations, according to the article.

WAR & WOMEN

Speaker says the 2 should never mix; he believes war to be a masculine ritual

By Desiree Lamberson
Kansas State Collegian

Martin VanCreveld doesn't believe women should serve in the military.

VanCreveld, a professor at the Hebrew University in Israel, presented "Less Than They Can Be: The Role of Women and Men in the Military" Tuesday night in Union Forum Hall.

In the speech, VanCreveld said war is an assertion of manhood rather than politics.

"War, before it is anything else, in my view, is a test and assertion of masculinity," VanCreveld said.

"Having women would take away the real function of war."

VanCreveld said he believed that throughout history, war has been a rite of passage into manhood. Although politics do play some part, VanCreveld said war is more of a cultural aspect to those who fight in the war almost as an initiation ritual for men to assert their masculinity. Consequently, if women were to serve, then the ritual loses meaning.

"If they are open to women, they will lose any point that they ever had," he said.

VanCreveld said he believed war was an assertion of masculinity because it is the only human act that lets a man show his true intelligence and skill.

"Of all human acts, war is the only one that will put a man as intelligent and as strong against himself," he said. "Only in war are there no rules. War is the only human activity in which everything is permitted."

However, VanCreveld said that throughout history, women have contributed somewhat to war.

"This is not to say that women have never played a role in war," he said. "But it is in the rarest conditions that they have actively contributed to war."

VanCreveld said women who have served in war often are less victimized and suffer fewer consequences for their actions.

"A woman would only be discharged for an offense that would put a man in jail for the rest of his life, or in some countries, shot," he said.

VanCreveld then said that in present times, men no longer want to join the military because of the influx of women.

"An influx of women caused the social prestige of being in the military to go down," he said. "Men who remained in the job were looked down upon."

VanCreveld said the reason for the decrease in prestige was because of the humility a man would feel serving under a woman.

"Because to fight with women, to fight against women, to be commanded by women, humiliates men," he said.

Feminism is a luxury made possible by peace, and the influx of women is due to the lack of a serious war since World War II, he said.

VanCreveld said he acknowledges his argument has implications.

"Heaven forbid I tell men and women what to do with their lives," he said.

However, VanCreveld said he would tell his daughter to do whatever she wished but that if she chose to have children, then her primary responsibility should be to her children.

Also, he said he would remind her that it is hard for a woman to succeed.

"To succeed as a woman, you must be twice as good as any man," he said.

VanCreveld said he believed his argument also applied to other professions.

"If it is true for the military, it is true for a great many professions," he said. "The influx of women into any profession will make the men vote with their feet."

Don Mrozek, head of the Department of History, said the department chose VanCreveld to speak because of his record.

"He is a historian who has a very strong record of publication and has also continued to lead the discussion of serious issues," Mrozek said.

King Hussein joins summit at key stage

The Associated Press

QUEENSTOWN, Md. — Jordan's ailing King Hussein, who made peace with Israel after losing at war, joined President Clinton at the Mideast summit Tuesday as the talks between Israel and the Palestinians entered a "hard bargaining" stage.

"There are still gaps, significant ones," State Department spokesman James P. Rubin said.

Clinton canceled a two-day political trip to California to devote a fifth day to Mideast summitry. He and Hussein arrived separately at the secluded Chesapeake Bay summit site, where Israeli and Palestinian negotiators have been closeted for six days, trying to reach a West Bank accord.

After conferring for about 30 minutes, they planned separate meetings with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat. White House spokesman Joe Lockhart held out the possibility of a four-way meeting later in the day.

The Clinton administration invited Hussein to join the talks. The king had been resting at his Potomac, Md., home after a round of chemotherapy at the Mayo Clinic, where he is being treated for cancer.

Drawing in another Mideast leader, Clinton gave Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak a 10-minute telephone update on peace talks. Clinton also expressed his condolences for a weekend train accident in Alexandria, Egypt that left 50 dead, Lockhart said.

A day after a grenade attack in Israel further complicated the talks, Rubin said the two sides had shifted from posturing to endgame bargaining. "We are past the atmospherics and down to hard bargaining," he said.

There were some signs of progress.

A senior U.S. official said, "People are rushing around and trying to come up with bridging ideas." Another sign was word from the Palestinian delegation that U.S. mediator Dennis Ross, Palestinian negotiator Saeb Erekat and an Israeli legal expert, Daniel Reisner, had resumed drafting tentative language for an agreement after a three-day suspension.

OUR VIEW

Ambassador election is popularity contest

It is election time again for the K-State Ambassadors, and we are left to make a choice among them for the person we feel would represent our university best.

We don't know who to choose. We don't know what we are choosing for. We don't know these candidates, because our experience with them has been limited. As a result, the election is left largely to students who vote out of personal connections to the candidates.

The two most popular people win — the people with the most close friends, the people who have more people in their corner. It might as well still be a Homecoming King and Queen contest, for all we know about the candidates.

This is the feeling we have gotten from ambassador elections in the past. We don't know our candidates because, traditionally, we have not known a great deal about them. Traditionally, we have not understood their job. Traditionally, we have not seen the ambassadors working on campus, so we do not know what we really elect them for.

The ambassadors were created for several reasons, most notably, to take over the title of Homecoming King and Queen in the 1970s. Back then, Homecoming was in dire straits. Involvement was suffering, interest was waning and unless something was done for the celebration, Homecoming would cease to exist.

In 1978, the Blue Key senior honorary stepped into the picture and joined with the KSU Alumni Association to try to bolster Homecoming. At that time, the ambassadors were created not only to provide a student voice at alumni events but also to provide Blue Key members and other campus leaders with a leadership opportunity — résumé training. Originally, applicants were screened before being granted an interview with their peers and faculty members. If the candidates were able to make it through successive interviews with faculty and students, they were allowed to run in the election. Blue Key saw the competition as excellent training for members to have before moving on to the job world. In 1978, Sue Livingston and Mitch Holthus were elected as ambassadors, and their responsibilities were limited to 15 to 20 events when they served as K-State's representatives.

Today, ambassadors might attend anywhere between 75 to 100 events. They give tours through campus, they speak at different alumni and recruiting functions, they talk to prospective students one-on-one, they speak at college nights, they help with the For Sophomores Only program, they attend Catbacker events and they help the president's office, assisting with the Landon Lectures and other tasks. The selection process is more challenging than it used to be — while the pre-interview screening is no longer used, applicants who make it to the faculty-interview level are asked to give a short presentation to demonstrate public-speaking skills.

The ambassador finalists are chosen on the basis of a number of different qualities but the most critical is their ability to communicate, both in small groups and to large audiences. Ambassadors can make or break a college recruitment program. They are critical for alumni impressions of K-State and for fund raising. Interviews with a number of students who attend college recruitment events indicate that whether students buy into the university is dependent upon how well ambassadors sell it.

The student body, however, lacks the resources necessary to make an informed choice. We do not know how well each candidate can communicate. All we have to go on is what tradition dictates — a small Collegian article and a few general essays professing each candidate's love for K-State as our guide. As it stands, we would be better off allowing Faculty Senate to choose for us than to continue to make our decisions based on such little information.

Perhaps we would better understand the importance of the job if we had more experience with ambassadors beyond Homecoming. Perhaps if they had a platform on which to run and a job to do on campus — organizing Wildcat Welcome Week or Open House, for instance — perhaps then we could see the merits in voting, and we could be more concerned about our decision.

This should not be just a popularity contest.

SIBLING RIVALRY

Political parties began with ambitions of brotherhood, but that quickly turned sour

VIEWPOINT

JASON RUCKER

The two sides began with noble purposes of brotherhood, cooperation and looking out for their territory. They coexisted with only a few skirmishes. Then all-out warfare began. Their sole purpose became the destruction of the opposing side by any means possible.

Sound like the history of gangs in America? I was talking about the history of party politics, specifically the Democrats and the Republicans. Their relentless clash is a large part of the reason for the general public's apathy surrounding politics today.

To subdue the question many people are pondering now, I am neither a Democrat nor a Republican. I don't side with any party. I support whoever happens to be of the same mind as I am on a given issue.

The parties have a fairly set-in-stone stand on all the key issues, and my views don't completely mirror those of either party.

The invention of party politics had well-intentioned beginnings. Legislators of similar thinking came together to help each other meet their states' needs.

As with any such conglomeration, there must be compromise in order to work as a unit. Members of the parties would help to pass bills important to their fellow partisans in return for votes and support for their own bills — the old, "you scratch my back, I'll scratch yours."

Everything worked out fine and dandy, but the rift between the parties grew with each passing year — until we ended up here, with two dominant parties who despise each other so much that progress nearly has been halted altogether by mindless bickering.

Today, it seems the parties will stop at nothing as long as they can prevent their opposition from passing legislation. If party A writes a bill stating that funding should be approved to provide the military with guns, party B would oppose on grounds that you could put an eye out with one of those things. If party B writes a bill to provide relief funds to victims of floods, party A would do their darndest to prevent its passing, saying the victims should have known better than to live on a floodplain.

Who ends up hurt? Certainly not the politicians. The people who are caught in the middle are helpless to do anything but wait for logic and decency to settle over the embattled House and Senate floors. Can you say, "When hell freezes over?" I knew you could.

Many party members have abandoned their constituents. They vote with the party, in order to gain personal power, and leave their states and districts to fend for themselves. Because a candidate was elected by a majority of one party does not mean the party's stand on a given issue is the best thing for the constituents. Politicians have forgotten the reason for their jobs: To serve the people who they were chosen to represent.

The sad thing is too many voters don't know the difference. If they see the people they voted for in important committees and hobnobbing with the bigwigs, they assume they must be doing great jobs. No one bothers to keep tabs on the people for whom they vote.

People will vote for politicians they've never heard of, based on party lines. This might be a somewhat reasonable idea. You assume if a person is a member of a given party, they likely will vote a certain way. But, there are no guarantees. If you don't know who people are, how can you be sure you would like them to represent you?

From an objective point of view, it's easy to see how ridiculous things have become. There always have been and there always will be accusations flying as thick as flies over a dung heap, but let's look at one of the most popular ones.

_____ (Fill in the name of the politician you despise most) is a liar! Calling a politician a liar is as redundant as calling a snake cold-blooded. Politicians lie, regardless of party, and the sick thing that is we've grown to accept it, the prime example being campaign promises.

People think if politicians meet half of their campaign promises they're doing a good job. If your spouse met half of the marriage vows, would you be happy? I hope not.

How can things be improved? The only solution I could come up with is for us as voters to make our representatives accountable for their actions. Pay attention to what your representatives are accomplishing.

When you go to the voting booth, go in knowing who you're voting for. Vote based on merit, not on whether the candidates wear a donkey or an elephant pin on their lapel.

New architecture covers up past, but doesn't upstage it

VIEWPOINT

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

A drive down Poyntz Avenue is like a history lesson in the decline and fall of public architecture.

On the one end, the Riley County Courthouse — a building that knows what it is and confidently and honestly uses limestone to express permanence and government authority. On the other, the new Manhattan City Hall — an expansion of a building that denies itself by covering its front elevation in the architectural equivalent of fake boobs.

The expansion and renovation of City Hall, which had its Open House and formal dedication last night, is the realization of a $4.5 million project designed by local architects Brent Bowman and Associates Architects PA.

The Poyntz elevation of the new City Hall is wrapped in an almost Cyclopean limestone, but it's used as a mere facade (or fake boobs, if you will). Bowman, along with architects Hammond Beeby and Babka Inc. of Chicago, used limestone much more convincingly in Hale Library. On his own with City Hall, attempts at cribbing from Hale were wrong-headed. You might be asking, why use limestone at all?

Had the original City Hall contained limestone in any fashion, one possibly could argue for the increased use of the material, but the original building was a quasi-modernist box of metal and brick, with a simple, flat entrance canopy that seemed elegantly reserved for a public building.

Perhaps Bowman and his clients were trying to give City Hall more street presence, and limestone was seen as the most logical means to that end. Surprisingly, the architect proves this insufficient explanation because the southeast facade — all glass and metal panels framed with an exposed structural sunshade — is so wonderfully classical. The columns, which are hollow square steel tubes, also have the function of acting as rain pipes. For gushing pure institutional stability, the classical, rhythmic splay of columns along an elevation has no equal.

Hence, the building takes on the qualities of a split personality — heavy-handed limestone barn on the north and high-tech classical box on the south. Only the latter really makes any credible gesture to the original building.

There is a semi-arced roof on the two-story north lobby with an exposed steel structural system painted white. The cheap metal halide lighting system is overkill with the white ceiling, but what's harder to understand is how the building can go from the exposed structure overhead to a lobby of dark, rich wood paneled walls and ruddy tile floors. This isn't the Courthouse, and the infusion of the almost antique-looking wood is questionable.

To be fair, the meeting room for City Commission hearings is large, plush and worlds apart from the old cramped, closed-in quarters this city had lived with for too long. The large windows of the north limestone facade elevation are views into this room from Poyntz and act as a symbolic window into the proceedings of government. Again, consider, if you will, the south elevation. Perhaps if more glass had been used on the north with less covering of structural components with wood and stone, had the intended symbol of open government been more direct?

Driving by the Courthouse, the verticality of the building might be inspiring, but do you really know what's going on inside? You have an idea, but there is no direct connection between inner activity and outer curiosity — something that's a 20th-century concept of built democracy. That could have been resolved with the City Hall project, but the few windows into the Commission room aren't a complete resolution.

Why can so many building types be recognizable — the courthouse, mall, church, gas station — and in nearly every town in Kansas, the city hall is some sort of dumping ground for architecture lacking in symbols and integrity. I'm not going to suggest the old city hall, designed in 1955 by Floyd Wolfernbarger, is a lost masterpiece of civic architecture, but it had clean lines and an interesting, understated mix of materials its somewhat showy renovation eschews.

The City Hall represents the completion of a public building cycle this city will not see again for some time. Bowman, who has been involved in most of the cycle with such designs as the Manhattan Public Library and Manhattan Regional Airport, has put an indelible stamp on the Manhattan of the 1990s. Although far from remaking the image of the city, his non-confrontational architecture nonetheless is a physical embodiment of the pedestrian ideals that fuel the private sector of this city.

This, in itself, is perplexing.

For although the local business community might be content in putting the almighty dollar over the concerns of city-making or intelligent building for the ages, our city government has, for the most part, proved to be one of the more progressive in Kansas. This, I think, is reason enough to expect a City Hall building that somehow would represent that progressivism.

Coach says students make the difference

Dear Students,

I would like to thank each and every one of you personally who attended the 1998 Basketball Camp Out festivities this weekend. The team really appreciated your support during its scrimmage on Sunday evening. The free-throw, three-point field goal, and slam-dunk contests that followed generated a tremendous amount of excitement and enthusiasm in Ahearn Field House. We're glad we were able to get so many students involved in the respective competitions with our players. A fun time was had by all! We hope you enjoyed the pizza, sodas, T-shirts and doughnuts on Monday morning as well.

The Big 12 Conference is one of the best college basketball conferences in the country. My staff and I really like our team, and we are extremely excited about the upcoming season. We want and need your support and high energy level each and every night we play in Bramlage Coliseum. Let's get Bramlage rockin' for all 18 of our home games! YOU (THE STUDENTS AND THE FANS) MAKE THE DIFFERENCE! There are going to be a lot of close ball games in the conference this year. Let's show the world who has the best and loudest crowd.

Thanks again for your support of our program. We'll see you at the games!

Student input used for Union decision

Editor,

We are writing in response to your Oct. 7 editorial regarding the K-State Student Union's food service. Your editorial implied that "the powers that be at the K-State Student Union" decided to move from china and silverware to paper products in the Stateroom without considering students' preferences or the environmental effect. Contrary to your article, it was actually the students' opinion that influenced the change.

The Stateroom will be replaced with a food court when the renovations are completed. The new food vendors will be providing their own specialized paper products and most of their food does not require silverware. The need for china and silverware will decrease. Paper products are standard in food courts, and the adjustment should be expected.

Students supported the food-court change before the renovation plans were finalized. No transition is perfectly smooth, however. We understand there are still some food items, such as chicken, where plasticware does not cut it. The Union has ordered silverware to be used with the kitchen classic line to solve this problem.

Unfortunately, going back to 100-percent china and silverware is not possible. Our current dishwasher is being replaced with a smaller version to provide necessary space for the renovation. This change cannot be reversed. The Union Governing Board, composed primarily of students, is weighing its options, as well as continually seeking student feedback to see what can be done. More options might become apparent once the University Recycling Committee is fully established.

Our purpose always has been to serve students. We are not the K-State Union, rather the K-State Student Union.

Union corporation board president;

Stubbornness problem in lack of recycling

Editor,

I continually am appalled at the indecency and disrespect people exhibit to their Mother Earth.

Something as simple as recycling cans repeatedly is ignored by people who are too stubborn, ignorant or lazy, I know not which, to throw their cans into recycling bins. Even here, in our pristine Manhattan, I continually see cans in the trash and not in the recycling bins.

These recycling bins are made specially for the purpose of recycling aluminum cans, hence the name "recycling bins." Even though these bins are placed right next to the trash cans, there are always cans in the trash. Is it stubbornness? Do you want to continue to fill up the landfills until we have to keep our trash in our own backyards? Or is it laziness?

— Joshua Lippold,
fifth-year senior in landscape architecture

People need to realize some resources scarce

Editor,

Isn't it wonderful to live in a world where we have no cares and no worries? A world where we have endless resources at our disposal, where our conveniences come first and everything else falls second, where garbage has many places to be buried in the vast Kansas prairie. Yes, I am referring to the recent decision by the K-State Student Union to continue its use of plasticware and Styrofoam in the Stateroom after its renovation is complete.

Three questions need to be addressed by the Union:

1. Does anyone really enjoy eating on Styrofoam plates with plasticware that breaks under minimum pressure?

2. Does anyone know where all the garbage goes?

3. At a time when the city of Manhattan is trying to address issues of sustainability, and the university is expanding its recycling program, is the use of untold amounts of Styrofoam that is not recycled the way we want to go?

If proper sanitation is a concern for food utensils, then maybe recyclables are the way to go, but not disposables. I know of students who are boycotting the Union due to its use of plastics.

An administrator at this university, when asked a question recently about recycling on campus, responded by saying the students have a hard enough time studying, let alone having to figure out into which container to discard an aluminum can! Does the university think so poorly of its students? Maybe it is right. Maybe we are too busy to take the time. I prefer to think we are unaware of the severity of the situation and have not been convinced that we can make a difference.

One simple way we can make a difference is through recycling our own waste. Howie's Recycling is the main recycling center in Manhattan, with Dillons (aluminum cans and limited plastic) coming in second and a few cleaners and other grocery stores taking plastic bags only.

Styrofoam is recyclable, but Howie's does not collect it in Manhattan because it does not get enough to make it profitable. If we want to let the Union go with Styrofoam plates, it must be convinced that we want them recycled. If it insists on using plasticware, let them use only those plastics that are recyclable.

Paint It Purple needs reevaluation next year

Editor,

The purpose of this response is in two parts. One is to explain, not defend, the community-service project Paint It Purple and the reasoning behind its termination in 1998. The other purpose is to defend a system that is often under-represented or misunderstood in the eyes of the public.

Paint It Purple is an all-greek community-service project that is a part of the Homecoming competition. The idea of it was to ensure that 75 percent of all greeks spent at least two to three hours of community service during Homecoming week. This 3-year-old project still is evolving in order to serve the community better and to facilitate participation by the greek community.

This year was the first time there was not a set date for every chapter. This was done in hopes of spreading out the resources over the course of the semester to prevent an overwhelming wave of volunteers for a city the size of Manhattan.

Excuses aside, the greeks, as a whole, failed. Other than a few exceptions, the percentage goal and time actually doing community service were not being met. The end product was an upset to United Way, with greeks not fulfilling their end of the bargain. This is the single reason for the termination of the project. Should we have continued to waste the time and resources of the United Way for the rest of the semester?

No. The logical step is to reevaluate the program and make the needed changes for next year.

As for the reasoning that the greeks are doing the project for Homecoming points only, I would refer to the multitudes of service projects and philanthropies that each chapter does at K-State. As of the most recent polling of chapters, which is about 2 years old, nearly 20,000 hours of community service were completed and projects raised $100,000. These figures do not include the Pi Beta Phi sorority's recent Habitat for Humanity project that raised more than $30,000. None of these activities produce points for any competition.

Should the greek community be chastised for bettering, and in some cases failing to better, the local area? According to the Collegian editorial board, the answer is yes. Even if Paint It Purple is the single largest effort by any campus group(s), the answer is the same.

I encourage the Collegian to continue its efforts to focus on the negatives about greeks, because the dirty laundry must move papers for it. It is always easier to criticize those who try to make a difference and yet remain idle in your own actions.

Bed and breakfasts fill much-needed niche

Editor,

I am writing to encourage the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board to consider changing some of the existing regulations that govern bed and breakfast establishments.

Recently, I read with interest the story in the Collegian pertaining to zoning regulations that restrict bed and breakfasts from serving food other than breakfasts for their guests. The proprietors have turned to catering and hosting parties at their establishments to generate extra income to help pay the costs of restoring their homes and installing commercial kitchens required by yet another regulation. I find this discouragement of private enterprise and entrepreneurship particularly troubling in view of the many and substantial tax abatements and tax incentives Manhattan gives to various industries and businesses to try to get them to locate here.

The bed and breakfast proprietors are already here, and it hasn't cost Manhattan taxpayers a cent. It is also a welcome change for neighborhoods to have an attractively decorated and well maintained home in their midst rather than another poorly kept large house, owned by an absentee landlord, that has been divided into a number of apartments occupied by people who have no incentive to properly maintain the building and yard.

Additionally, it's been my experience that these proprietors deliver quality for the cost — they are able to provide a customized menu within an established budget for a wide range of activities.

They fill what, in my opinion as well as in my work experience as events coordinator for the College of Architecture, Planning and Design, is a badly needed niche in Manhattan.

Private enterprise and entrepreneurship of this type should be encouraged and rewarded, not discouraged and penalized.

I hope the board will make a real effort to change the existing zoning regulations so the bed and breakfasts can continue to flourish and enhance the Manhattan community.

Just look at the numbers. No offense in NCAA I-A football scores more points, no defense holds opposing offenses to fewer points than the K-State Wildcats.

STATISTICALLY SOUND

Bishop, Wildcats putting hefty numbers on scoreboard for offense

STEVE HEBERT/KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

THE OFFENSE: 52.8 POINTS PER GAME

K-State quarterback Michael Bishop scampers 12 yards into the end zone for a touchdown during the first quarter of Saturday's game against Oklahoma State at KSU Stadium. K-State defeated Oklahoma State 52-20. K-State has scored 317 points in the six games they have played this season, averaging 52.8 points per game.

BY JOSHUA KINDER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Through the course of K-State's six football games this season, the Cats have put 317 points on the board — a hefty sum that averages out to 52.8 points per game.

The offense, which features eight returning starters from last season's 11-1 team, attributes most of its success to the experience at each skill position. This experience, mixed with the new talent of wide receiver Aaron Lockett and running back Frank Murphy, is making an already strong offense a little bit better.

"If you've been around for a year, you should be a better player, and consequently, if you have enough of them, you should be a better team," head coach Bill Snyder said.

"How much improvement we made I'm not really certain. I think Aaron Lockett has had an impact in that. Michael's improvement has had an impact on that," he said about quarterback Michael Bishop.

Senior running back Eric Hickson echoed Snyder's praise of Lockett and said Murphy also added to the Cats' offensive attack.

"Aaron is a young player, but he's a great player," Hickson said. "He could be better than his brother, Kevin. He's at another level right now, and Aaron could get to that level if he keeps it up.

"Frank is going to be a great player. Once he gets more comfortable with the offense, he'll be a good addition. With those two guys, it's upgraded a little bit," he said.

The Wildcats have played against some less-than-challenging teams in the earlier part of this season, but they are getting into the heart of their Big 12 Conference schedule. With stiffer competition awaiting, Snyder said he is unsure if the Cats' scoring trend will continue.

"A lot of those points were gathered with teams that probably weren't real good defensive football teams," Snyder said. "We're kind of in the meat of the schedule and getting ready for that right now. I don't know how long this will persist, but I'm pretty sure we're not going to continue to score 60 points a ball game.

"We're always going to try to make all the improvements we can, and if we can find ways to better ourselves offensively through the use of personnel, we do that too," he said.

Hickson gave credit for the offensive explosion to the guys up front — the offensive line. He said winning couldn't happen without its solid play.

"We've got confidence in our offensive line to make blocks," Hickson said. "I've got confidence that we can run and make the catches and put points on the board.

"We probably get all the glory those guys deserve, because without them, we definitely wouldn't be going the way we're going," he said.

Even after allowing 20 points to Cowboys, defense still ranks No. 1

BY JOHN BERGGREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's defense allowed an uncharacteristic 20 points to be scored in Saturday's game against Oklahoma State.

You can bet the Cowboys' offensive outpour is something the defensive unit has not forgotten.

"When they put 20 up, that kind of hurt us because we try to keep teams off the board if we can," safety Lamar Chapman said. "That hurt our pride a little bit, and we've just got to come back this week and be ready to play.

"You can bet that we'll be thinking about those 20 points when we walk out on the field this week."

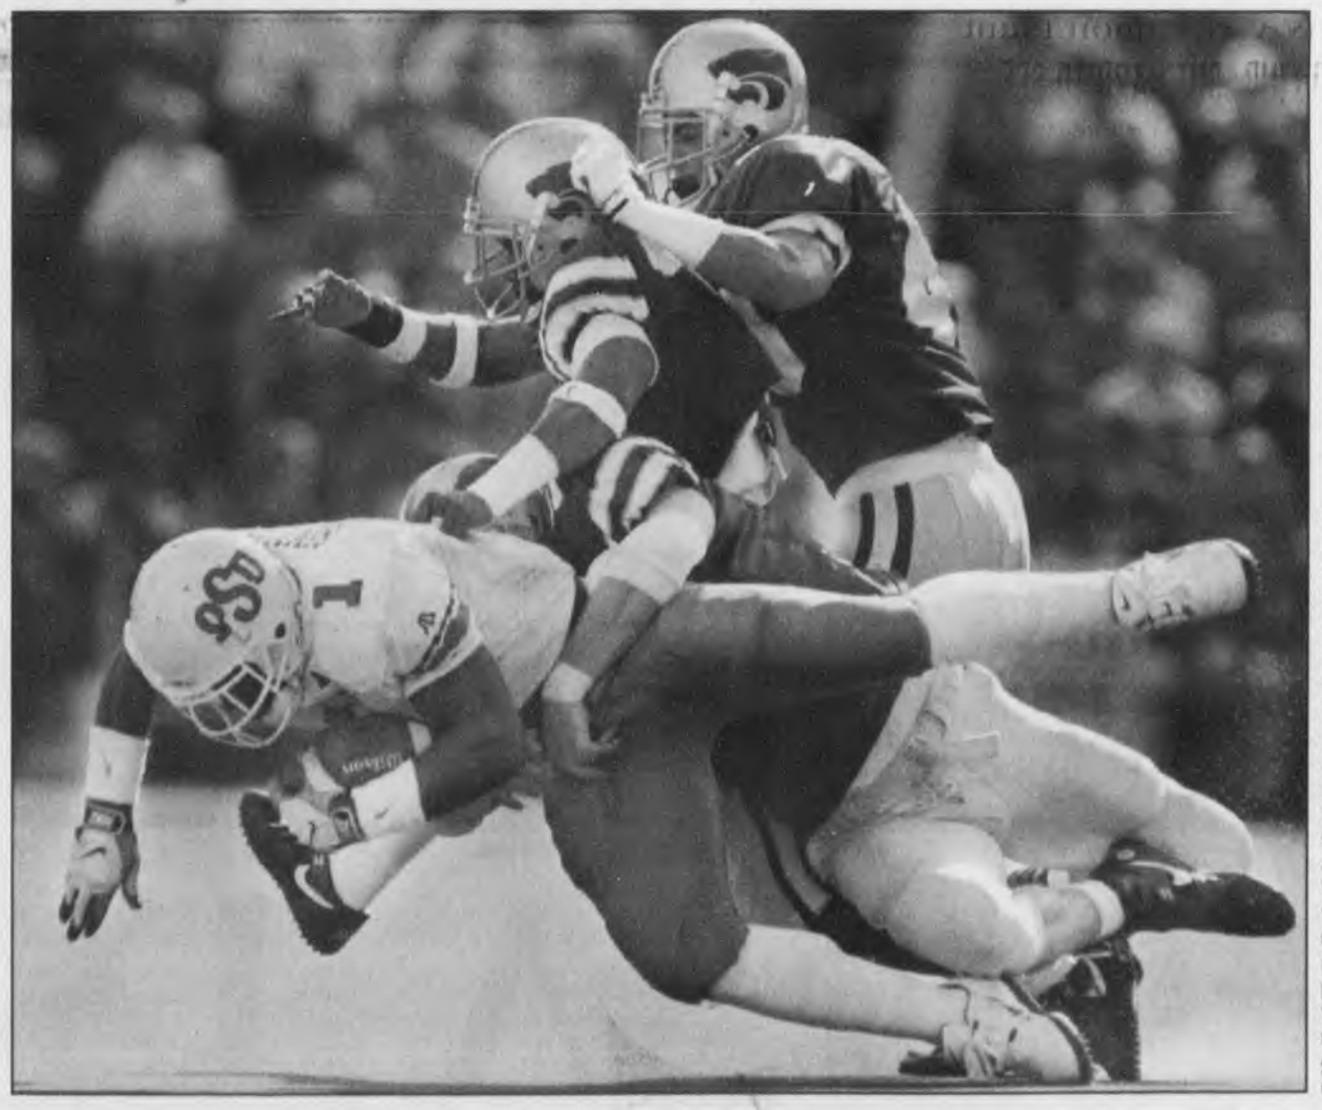
The Wildcats still remain the nation's No. 1 scoring defense, allowing only 8.3 points per game through their first six contests. K-State also ranks in the top five in three other NCAA statistical categories, including fourth in rushing defense (79 rushing yards per game), fourth in pass efficiency defense and third in total defense, behind Florida State and Ohio State.

Redshirt freshman defensive back Milton Proctor said the pride that comes with having one of the nation's top defenses already has been instilled in him as an underclassman.

"There's no denying that we take a lot of pride in being No. 1 on defense," Proctor said. "The statistics aren't any kind of distraction to us or anything, because we focus more on our upcoming opponents more than we think about what people are saying about us.

"We hear all the talk, and we don't like to be scored on."

Defensive end Joe Bob Clements echoed the pride factor that comes with owning one of the nation's top defenses.



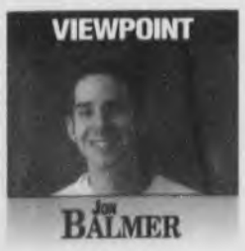
"It really hurts our pride when we give up points on defense," Clements said. "I don't think anybody ever walks into the locker room happy if we give up points. Obviously, we're not used to giving up points like we did against Oklahoma State, and we're not at all happy with our effort in that game."

Clements also said that if the nation's No. 1 scoring defense does ever get into trouble, it's nice to know that the nation's No. 1 scoring offense is waiting on the sidelines to give K-State a boost.

"We realize that it's going to happen, that people make great plays and will score points on us, but hopefully, the offense will be there to bail us out," Clements said.

"The offense can't count on us every game to shut a team out, and we can't expect the offense to go out and score 50 points every game.

"Every time we win, we win as a team, and hopefully if one aspect of the team isn't playing very well, another one steps up and does very good," he said.



THE DEFENSE: 8.3 POINTS PER GAME

Oklahoma State running back Nathan Simmons (1) is gang tackled by K-State's Travis Ochs (behind), Dyshod Carter (middle) and Jarrod Cooper during first-quarter play Saturday at KSU Stadium. K-State's defense allowed Oklahoma State to score 20 points against them. The Wildcats still remain the nation's No. 1 scoring defense, allowing only 8.3 points per game through their first six contests.

Cheap rip-off of animated MTV show might help clear up national championship picture

VIEWPOINT

JON BALMER

This is the season I've been waiting for since the Cats (Allow me to clarify — the Kentucky Wildcats) took the crown in college basketball and those diabolical Detroit Red Wings tainted the Stanley Cup for the second-straight season.

Yes, it's hockey season, and the weather outside lets you know it. Overcast skies beckon you to pick up a stick and lace up a pair of skates. The chill in the air makes a hockey jersey seem more and more inviting. Suddenly, there's no NBA to distract you from your true desire for some quality time with the Zamboni.

Before I dive into the realm of the NHL, there are some other issues to discuss:

■ Is there any clear-cut way of determining who's in the quest for the coveted top-two spots in the Bowl Championship Series? While you're busy determining K-State's position in the Sagarin ratings, your sensitive sports mind suddenly is bludgeoned with vitally important statistics courtesy of the USA Today/ESPN Coaches Poll, AP Top 25 and T-Bone Rodney's Slick Sheet.

As important as these polls might be to the BCS, perhaps I could propose an easier method to sort out the top four teams in the land: Mascot Deathmatch.

Sure, its a clear rip-off of MTV's "Celebrity Deathmatch," but it's a concept whose time has come.

This process would eliminate quickly the two schools whose exit from the top of the mountain is long overdue: UCLA and Tennessee.

Smoky the dog might be the pride of Knoxville, but the mutt would be no match for Willie the Wildcat.

And the vaunted UCLA Bruin? After an encounter with Ohio State's Brutus the Buckeye, Cade McNown's favorite teddy bear would be sent away to nap time.

That leaves us with the two title contenders, Brutus and Willie. Although I'm not sure who would triumph in this match, a battle between two mascots suffering from gigantism of the head would be mighty entertaining.

■ Just when I thought baseball was back on top, Fox Sports had to mar an otherwise stellar season by picking up the 1998 World Series. It's not that its broadcasting crew is horrible, but it pails in comparison with NBC's one-two punch of Bob Costas and Bob Uecker.

While Costas provides insight and quality play-by-play at the highest level, Uecker's witty comments on the most obscure side-notes of baseball prove why he's the sports equivalent to the sidekick on "Late Night with Conan O'Brien," Andy Richter.

Anyone who remembers Uecker from his role as the flask-friendly radio broadcaster in the "Major League" series knows the extent of his comedic touch. With Uecker's humor mixing with Costas' by-the-book reporting, NBC had a broadcasting team unlike any other.

■ If you're looking for someone to have a break-out season in college basketball, look no further than K-State power forward Manny Dies. Already carrying a tremendous chip on his shoulder, Dies enters the final season of his stormy stay in Manhattan with another cross to bear.

Recovering from an off-season knee surgery, Dies already is hearing the whispers that he'll be a step slower this season.

Don't let those rumors fool you.

At the first men's basketball media day Oct. 13, Dies' attitude reflected his desire and intensity for the game entering his senior season. With a conference race that features no clear-cut powerhouse this season, Dies knows he is capable of leading the Cats back to the promised land.

■ Speaking of the promised land, did I mention the NHL began its 1998-99 season recently?

That's right, unlike their vacationing NBA brethren, the ice warriors are going strong and have the chance to corner a new market of fans with the NBA strike suffocating its fan base.

While I can't offer sound betting advice to the average fan (I'll leave that to fellow Collegian columnist Sam Felsenfeld), I can offer a little insight into the hockey world.

Look for the Chicago Blackhawks to bounce back after taking a temporary leave of absence from last year's playoffs. The Hawks are retooled with the acquisition of veteran center Doug Gilmour and new head coach Dirk Graham, a former Chicago star. Although I wouldn't dub them a Stanley Cup contender, the Hawks will be much more aggressive and improved, especially in their offensive attack.

The top teams going into this season appear to be Dallas (the victors of the Brett Hull battle), Philadelphia (who now have a dominant net minder in John Vanbiesbrouck) and, sad to say, Detroit.

I'm afraid my wisdom is all dried up, so do yourself a favor and check out a hockey game, be it on television or in person. Who knows, perhaps you also will feel that chill down your spine when you see a player flash that toothless grin at you.

Casting a vote for POWERCAT PRIDE

These are the candidates for K-State ambassador – the student representative for the KSU Alumni Association. Students can vote for their choices through Friday in the K-State Student Union. Winners will be announced at Saturday's football game.

Angela Moxley

MOXLEY

When I was in high school I remember suffering from "senioritis." I dreamed of the day I would come to K-State. I have been a Wildcat since the day I was born, so there was never a question in my mind as to where I would attend college.

After two years and 10 weeks at K-State, my sense of purple pride has grown even stronger. These are some of the memories I will carry with me long after I leave the K-State campus.

I'll remember living in Ford Hall and eating chicken and rice daily at Derby Food Center. I'll remember giving campus tours to prospective students starting my own freshman year, even before I knew where everything was located. I'll remember taking road trips with my family to watch the bowl games and showing up to football games a couple hours early to walk around the parking lot looking for friends and smelling the food from everyone's tailgate parties. I'll remember sitting on panels for senior days and having Pat Bosco ask for the fifth time, "So Angie, what is your major today?" I'll remember the teachers who inspired me to think creatively and the late-night slushee runs as a study break. But most of all, I'll remember the pride I feel as I walk through campus and see some of the best athletes, top scholars and most sincere friends you can find anywhere.

These are the reasons I love K-State, and they are what I would share with prospective students and alumni if selected as a K-State Ambassador.

Donald A. Adams, a businessman and lawyer from the early 1900s, once said, "To give real service you must add something which cannot be bought or measured with money, and that is sincerity and integrity." I sincerely want to represent the students of K-State to future and fellow Wildcats in a way that honors the values and traditions of K-State. An ambassador must be a model representative of the student body. During the past 2 1/2 years, I have committed myself to serving the university by actively participating in Student Senate, Chimes Junior Honorary, and the leadership studies programs. I also served as an orientation leader, and currently teach a University Experience class. I take my responsibilities seriously.

Ambassadors commit time and energy to a position that opens so many doors. These chosen individuals have great opportunities to meet people from diverse backgrounds and to learn something from them — everyone has a story to tell. Serving as an ambassador is a chance to learn even more about K-State and to continue involvement with the university after graduation. This unique position allows a person to share his or her sincere enthusiasm for K-State. If chosen as an ambassador, I will dedicate myself to serving the university in a new and challenging capacity and to being an honorable model for the students who call K-State home.

Turning off Interstate 70 toward Manhattan always gives me an incredible feeling. I smile knowing I am almost home. It is easy for me to know all the reasons I love K-State. How could anyone not find this place absolutely phenomenal? It's the simple pleasures felt every day that fill me with purple pride.

Seeing familiar-faced smiles as I approach friends gives me a warm feeling. Have you ever walked behind a group of professors and listened to their conversation? Fascination for their subjects and dedication to their students monopolizes the entire discussion. Game day in Manhattan is another perfect image of the spirit and tradition reflecting the very essence of our incredible university. One of my favorite sounds is the letters K-S-U echoing through the stadium on Willie's cue. K-State gives me a feeling of home while also challenging and motivating me. Through leadership, community service and Wildcat unity, we know that K-Staters are dedicated to each other and their education. We have a passion for excellence.

I could not have picked a better place to be right now, so I want to persuade high school students to make K-State their top choice. I also want to help alumni reminisce the best years of their lives and excite the faculty about the wonderful university they have helped create.

Sara is a junior in pre-medicine.

Philip Stein

Is K-State all you hoped it would be? Has your college experience met the expectations you set before deciding where to come to college? For me, K-State has far exceeded any goals or hopes I had about what college life or college education should be. As student ambassador, I would have the opportunity to let prospective students know all the great things our school has to offer, while at the same time ensuring that our alumni are proud of their alma mater.

I want to be able to describe to a potential student what it feels like to stand with 40,000 screaming, die-hard fans in a sea of purple at a football game. I want them to know there is such a thing as strong school spirit some place beyond high school. I want to explain how dedicated our faculty and administrators are in helping the student body. It is important for them to understand how diverse our students and faculty are but still realize that K-State has something to offer everyone. I would like them to know what it feels like to walk across a campus of more than 20,000 students and still feel welcome and at home.

Choosing to attend K-State was one of the best decisions I ever made. Our school has a great deal to offer each one of us, and I feel other people should have the same opportunity. I would like to represent K-State by bringing these opportunities to as many people as possible and show what true purple pride really is.

Philip is a sophomore in political science.

Jake Worcester

K-State is THE place to be, no doubt about it. After spending several years as a student on this campus, "Riding the Tide of Purple Pride," I know what K-State has to offer, and I don't know how anyone would ever want anything else.

From our ranking as the No. 1 public school for the number of Rhodes, Marshall, Truman and Goldwater scholars, to our four-consecutive national championships in livestock judging, K-State has shown that it competes at the top in all areas. I love being involved at K-State.

Where else in the country can a person feel so at home in a community of 20,000 that we can walk across campus, feeling like we belong, seeing friends everywhere and always receiving the friendly smiles we all so deserve? I love being at K-State.

These are only a few of the reasons I would like to serve as a K-State Ambassador. I love K-State. Period.

Jake is a sophomore in agricultural economics.

Students drive 30 hours to help hurricane victims

BY SUZANNE WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Marion, a resident of Gulf Port, Miss., walks outside her devastated home that has been hit by two tornadoes — spinoffs of Hurricane Georges.

She's looking for someone who can help her just as three K-State students pull into her driveway.

"I wish we could have done a whole lot more, but even with the little we did, we ... let those people know that there is somebody out there who can help them," Tom Boggs, senior in biology, said. "It just might take awhile, and it might have to be from Kansas."

Boggs and two other K-State students drove to Gulf Port Oct 10-11 to participate in the disaster relief effort that has developed since Hurricane Georges hit land. They spent more than 30 hours driving and close to 10 hours working with people who needed help.

Boggs said there is very little volunteer effort in the area, and the American Red Cross is having a hard time finding people to work.

"I don't understand. I mean, we came all the way from Kansas to help. Surely there have got to be people closer who are willing," Boggs said.

"WHEN THE TOPIC OF COMMUNITY SERVICE CAME UP, WE WANTED TO DO SOMETHING THAT WOULD MAKE AN IMPACT."

— JOE PLANTIKO JUNIOR, MANAGEMENT INFORMATION SYSTEMS

Joe Plantiko, junior in management information systems, said the volunteer work in Mississippi will satisfy the six-hour community service requirement for a class he and Boggs are required to take as resident assistants.

"When the topic of community service came up, we wanted to do something that would make an impact," Plantiko said. "With the disaster relief, we actually got to rebuild and see how much of a difference it made in lives."

Boggs, who has been a volunteer with the Red Cross since 1989, contacted the volunteer liaison coordinating work for the relief effort in Mississippi. He called area churches in search of a place to stay and found a halfway house about 30 minutes from the volunteer assignments.

Their first assignment was Marion's house.

"It took the roof off her house and flooded the upper floor," Boggs said of the storm. "We knocked back the walls and pulled out all the insulation in the ceiling and the bad plaster that needed to be replaced."

Plantiko had to separate the plaster from the insulation because it was too heavy to be put in trash bags. He said they removed 10 bags of insulation and other building materials that were 60 to 80 pounds each.

"Every time I took a bag and set it on the deck, Joe was inside the house and he said, 'Dude, you know the floor is moving?'" Boggs said. "Every time I set a bag down it would shake the floor."

Their next assignment was a mobile home with debris leaning on all sides of it. They had to cut down trees to get everything off the home. Boggs said the family had cut only enough debris away so that it was possible to get in and out.

"We cleaned up the sides and from the street to the house," Boggs said. "We got most of the trees cleared away."

When they had finished that assignment, they packed up to go home. On their way out of town, they found a man and his daughter who had locked themselves out of their car.

"I got to talking to him and it turns out this guy is homeless — a tree fell on their house and that's why," Plantiko said. "This really affected a whole lot of people's lives."

Boggs said people come to him and ask him why he completed the project. He said they thought it was a waste of time because they only volunteered for 10 hours.

"It wasn't. If you would have been on that trip you would have seen it," Boggs said.

Plantiko said people were grateful to them, which made the trip worthwhile.

"In the end, they were coming up and hugging us — these three guys from Kansas that they had known for only a matter of hours," Plantiko said.

Boggs said they could have gone to Kansas City. A volunteer liaison there is looking for a commitment from people to come down every Saturday. He said he plans to try and make it as often as possible.

Boggs said people go there every weekend, though. That's easy. He said not many people can say they drove to Mississippi for the weekend to work.

"We might be crazy, but we sure had fun," Boggs said. "We're going to do more disaster work for spring break."

House approves $520 billion in spending

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The House ignored yearlong partisan rifts Tuesday and resoundingly approved a $520 billion spending bill pumping cash to farmers, teachers and the Pentagon and campaign-season bounty to lawmakers of all stripes.

The 333-95 vote reflected a compromise, struck last week between the White House and congressional leaders, that gave both parties victories to crow about. It also underlined that most lawmakers were weary of the 1998 budget fight and eager to get home to campaign for the Nov. 3 congressional elections.

The vote put the House on the cusp of completing its legislative work for the year, and handed the measure to the Senate for likely passage today. President Clinton was poised to sign it.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., defended the legislation against accusations by some conservatives that it represented a retreat from Republican goals of cutting taxes and spending.

Contrasting the bipartisan pact with the bellicose 1995 and 1996 budget fight with Clinton that produced two federal shutdowns, Gingrich labeled his party's conservatives "the perfectionist caucus."

Republicans claimed victories: blocking Clinton's plans for voluntary national student testing, boosting spending against illegal drugs and winning more than $8 billion for military readiness and other Pentagon programs. Voting for the measure would be a boon for a GOP eager to cut taxes and revamp Social Security next year, party leaders said.

Democrats talked of money they won to let communities begin hiring 100,000 teachers, help poor families pay heating bills, provide summer jobs for youths and clean up toxic wastes. And they said the bill's delivery three weeks into the new fiscal year was emblematic of the soon-to-expire 105th Congress.

"This bill is a symbol of the wasted time and misguided priorities of the Republican Congress," House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo, said.

Support was hardly unanimous, especially among conservatives.

While some of them cited GOP wins, others were bitter that elemental Republican principles had been violated, such as breaking budget caps to unleash nearly $21 billion in spending for embassy security and other so-called emergencies.

Still, large numbers of both Republicans and Democrats were voting for the measure. That phenomenon stood in contrast to a year that saw the two parties square off repeatedly over budget priorities, health care, campaign finance law, tobacco regulation and Clinton's possible impeachment.

The sweeping measure does far more than chisel numbers into a ledger. It toughens anti-drug laws, modestly cuts taxes on some farmers, companies and families and renames a post office in Oxon Hill, Md., after Jacob Chestnut, one of two police officers slain last summer by a Capitol intruder.

Dance students no longer face injuries and low temperatures

BY JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY

After years of enduring harsh temperatures and other difficult conditions, K-State's dance program has made the move to its newly renovated space in Nichols Hall.

JEFF COOPER/KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Joyce Yagerline, assistant professor of speech communication, theater and dance, instructs her Ballet I students Tuesday afternoon in one of the new dance studios in the basement of Nichols Hall. The dance studios were originally in Ahearn Field House and were not well equipped.

The new studios, located in the basement of Nichols, have been a dream for dance majors and instructors alike for many years. Originally formed as a part of the Department of Kinesiology in 1977, the dance program was first situated in the top floor of Ahearn Field House.

"The floors in Ahearn were not designed for dance, and the ceilings just weren't high enough," said Vera Orlock, assistant professor of speech communication, theater and dance. "Technology has changed since the last floors were put in."

The danger of dancers being hurt by landing wrong on an unyielding floor, or scraping the ceiling while jumping, was a daily issue.

Stifling summers and freezing winters provided more problems and often were enough to drive dancers out of the building.

"There was poor insulation, so classes often had to be canceled because of the cold," Joyce Yagerline, assistant professor in the department, said.

The dance program left the kinesiology department and helped form the Department of Speech Communications, Theater and Dance in 1987. A few years later, a plan was developed to have all three programs housed in Nichols Hall.

This plan became a reality this spring, when fund-raising efforts allowed construction to begin on the three new studios and departmental offices. Rooms were completely changed in some cases — what was once the Nichols swimming pool is now a suitable dance space. Last week, the department's students and faculty moved years of materials across campus.

The new studios sport state-of-the-art sprung floors with vinyl overlay to support jumping and provide better traction for landing. Performance mirrors were installed to aid students, and high ceilings allow for unlimited leaping. However, the dancing will have to be done without music until later this week when the new sound system is installed.

While dance classes were the main reason for building the new studios, the space is also home to theater rehearsals and student choreography performances and serves as a practice area for "Winterdance."

"It's very multipurpose in its use," Yagerline said.

In the future, she said, more informal performances with smaller audiences could be seen in the new studios.

'Beloved' opens to mixed reviews but has strong message

BY CORBIN H. CRABLE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Beloved," which opened last weekend to a mere $8.1 million gross and No. 5 spot at the box office, prompted some patrons to leave halfway through the movie, saying they were offended by the material.

Others said the film touched them like none they'd ever seen before.

Like it or not, "Beloved," directed by Jonathan Demme and based on author Toni Morrison's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel, will be a film talked about long after the Academy Awards have been handed out. Not since "Roots" (1977) or "The Color Purple" (1985), has a movie so bravely and frankly depicted the psychological impacts of slavery on its victims.

Oprah Winfrey shines as the main character, Sethe, who is attempting to rebuild her life in rural Ohio, 1873, after enduring the emotional and physical hardships of slavery during the Civil War. The only hindrance she faces in trying to create a new life for herself and her family is the painful memory of a choice she made 18 years ago to kill her children in order to save them from the life of slavery.

Danny Glover co-stars as Paul D, an old friend who is one of the few rays of light in Sethe's otherwise tumultuous world. The two become lovers, much to the dismay of Sethe's teenage daughter, Denver, played by Kimberly Elise. The three grow closer, however, and just when it seems life is gradually getting better, they find on their doorstep a lost young woman — a vision of beauty with the mind of a two-year-old.

The woman, played by Thandie Newton, is dubbed by Sethe as "Beloved." The mute woman is a child trapped in the body of an adult; her grunting, screaming and excessive drooling make her a frightful mystery at first, but soon it becomes clear: This woman-child is actually Sethe's deceased infant daughter, come back to haunt her in the form of an adult.

It is at this point that audiences may become uncomfortable. Some get the idea the plot is nothing short of a ghost story; the mixture of the supernatural and religion makes for a controversial theme. But if one takes a closer look, it becomes apparent that the movie is mainly about the psychological effect of slavery on its victims. It is because of her hellish experiences with slavery that Sethe makes the painful decision to take the lives of her children, showing the ultimate form of love between mother and child.

It doesn't matter whether or not you agree with the themes or actions of the characters, however. It is the big names in this film that will attract audiences. And, as expected, these big names deliver.

COURTESY PHOTO

Within the first few minutes of the movie, audiences forget about Oprah Winfrey as a talk show diva; her broken English and mannerisms transform her into a victim of slavery who is on the brink of insanity as Beloved dominates her family.

Glover's Paul D is a sympathetic yet strong-willed character, a far cry from his "Lethal Weapon" days. Winfrey and Glover play off each other well, both having already worked together in "The Color Purple" 13 years ago.

Elise, as Denver, is living proof of how her mother's obsession with the past is affecting her own life. The character of Denver emerges as a young woman determined to break away from the past. She is the force that keeps her family together amidst the gradual emotional breakdown of her mother.

Newton's Beloved, as the consequence of Sethe's decision, embodies Sethe's guilt of her decision. Newton captures the mentality of a child scorned through Beloved's violent outbursts and tantrums. Ultimately, however, it is the character of Beloved that makes or breaks the movie. Probably the reason some audiences dislike the movie is because this character may be viewed as tragic — a constant, haunting reminder of her mother's actions.

While it is easy to be disturbed by the way the movie tackles the themes of the supernatural and religion, this movie is mainly about the damaging effects of slavery. "Beloved" teaches its audiences that the past will not be forgotten so easily, and it is better to listen to this message than dismiss it.

2 architecture professors design projects to transform existing buildings

BY RUSSELL FORTMEYER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For architects Robert Condia and Wendy Ornelas, architecture is about transformation.

The two architects, who are married and are both associate professors of architecture, have designed two recent projects that have sought to transform existing buildings.

One, the yet-to-be-opened Mexican-Carribean restaurant Coco Bolos, is in Aggieville on Bluemont Avenue. The other, a new Dara's Fast Lane outpost with an adjoining Taco Casa Mexican fast-food restaurant, is on the prominent corner of Fort Riley Boulevard and 17th Street.

The Dara's project also included collaboration with fellow architect Torgeir Norheim, assistant professor of architecture.

"Architecture, to some degree, has to transform you," Condia said. "That's why people go to restaurants — the sounds, flavors, smells, color and texture take you to somewhere else."

Coco Bolos sits where Cinderella Dry Cleaners & Laundry used to be, but this isn't apparent when driving by today.

The restaurant, which is nearing completion, has a mustard yellow exterior, fancy metal-art details and a mural on the interior by K-State graduate Angiela Meyer.

Julie Haynes, who, with a partner, owns the building for Coco Bolos, told Condia and Ornelas her concept of the restaurant. The two architects made her ideas reality.

"One of our priorities was to take Julie's dream of this place and the realities of building codes and function and make a piece of architecture," Ornelas said. "She had created a story in her mind about how this restaurant came to be. We took that and went from there."

Coco Bolos, which will be run by two local chefs, also will feature a back patio that ties in with Haynes' other Aggieville restaurant, Rock-A-Belly Deli. The restaurant will seat about 50 people.

"Our design concept is an assaulting of the sense," Haynes said. "All of the colors of the place are very bright. We wanted it to wake you up when you arrived."

The design goals could not have been more different between the two projects. As Condia said, "Dara's intent is to make an attractive, functional building. The intention of Coco Bolos was to be a work of art."

For Dara's Fast Lane, the two architects were charged with taking an existing, conventional gas station and turning it into two businesses — the taco bar and the convenience store — with a limited design budget.

"The building is trying to have some coherence as well as creating two distinct entries within the building," Ornelas said.

Chris Darrah, president of Dara's Fast Lane Inc., had some specific goals in mind for developing the site.

Besides an aesthetically pleasing building that would appeal to customers, Darrah said he wanted the project to complement its site on one of the main corridors of town.

He said he is happy with the project and, knowing more what architects can do for clients, could see the potential for more collaboration in the future.

Both Condia and Ornelas said they felt strongly about practicing architecture outside of the classroom, but they also stressed that creating local examples of architecture is important for the growth of the city.

"In the absence of a culture of architecture, one could get the culture of franchise architecture," Condia said. "Does the city of Manhattan want to resist by creating a critical mass of franchise-corporate strip centers, or to resist it by attempting their own culture?"

RACE

races has produced any excitement, either.

"I guess I am surprised that we seem to be going through a re-election process where we're on our way to being successful, and it's occurring without as much effort," Graves said.

"It's not the contentious kind of election I've been used to. It's quite refreshing in that regard, both for me and for my family," he said.

Graves said he estimates his campaign will spend only a third as much as the $1.6 million it spent to defeat Miller in the contentious Republican primary election August.

Sawyer has had a minimum amount of money to spend on TV advertising and what he has spent has been devoted to airing his issues, not criticizing Graves.

"Part of the problem is with the media," Mary Isenhour, Sawyer's campaign manager, said. "Nobody wants to cover anything unless we're attacking and things are nasty and personal."

GRAVES

Isenhour said she aimed that remark at the larger media markets.

"A lot of smaller papers are paying attention," she said. "We've gotten lots of good press coverage in a lot of areas.

"Tom is the only one in the campaign who's put forth any bold, new ideas," she said. "Bill Graves doesn't raise issues because he's riding a good economy. You've only got ideas coming from one side."

Jeff Wagaman, Graves' campaign manager, said it has been a clean campaign "because both Bill Graves and Tom Sawyer are statesmen — they believe public service should be more of a priority than party-line politics.

"My guess," Wagaman said, "is the reason it's so quiet is because the voters are so comfortable with Governor Graves and their personal situations. And Tom got into the race late, and a lot of people are saying he's just carrying the party banner."

Wagaman said Sawyer "did his job," as far as the Democratic Party is concerned, "by beating Fred Phelps out of his party's nomination." He referred to the controversial Topeka anti-gay crusader who failed for the third time to claim the party's gubernatorial nomination.

Wagaman also defended the mass media's coverage of the campaign.

"I think the media has covered the race adequately," he said.

"Both guys want to talk about issues, and the media has covered them accurately."

Sawyer has stressed his STARS proposal to have the state pay the tuition costs of Kansas students to attend state institutions of higher education and has gotten some traction with it.

The challenger also has pressed for improving basic education — ensuring children can read, write and do math by the third grade — smaller class size, tax cuts such as eliminating the sales tax on grocery store food, slowing the growth of corporate hog farming and eliminating state debt.

Editorialists have endorsed Sawyer's plan, but it hasn't translated into endorsements of his candidacy over Graves.

The challenger also has pressed for improving basic education — ensuring children can read, write and do math by the third grade — smaller class size, tax cuts such as eliminating the sales tax on grocery store food, slowing the growth of corporate hog farming and eliminating state debt.

Graves has countered by saying the state already provides substantial resources for college scholarship programs, has proposed total elimination of property taxes on motor vehicles, zero tolerance of drugs and violence in schools, and has named task forces to compile a list of state transportation needs and recommend changes in higher education structure.

COMMISSION

mission to approve an additional $6,061 payment for traffic improvements, was approved by a 5-0 vote within 10 minutes.

The first item met considerably more debate across the Commission. A proposed ordinance tabled during the Sept. 5 meeting and revived Tuesday night would implement registration of alarm systems within Manhattan as well as a fine system for false alarms.

Under the system, the first three false-alarm calls would involve no fine, but the fourth would mandate a $50 fine, with $50 added to each subsequent false-alarm fine up until the eighth.

The eighth and subsequent offenses each carry a $250 fine.

In the previous meeting, the proposal was amended that, if passed, it would not take effect until Jan. 1, 1999, before it was tabled.

The proposal review addressed concerns from Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, voiced through Superintendent Dan Yunk, that the school district be exempt from the fine system.

Yunk said that although the district supports lowering false alarms in the city, it has "fundamental, philosophical problems" with one governmental agency collecting fines from another.

Money for possible fines would come from the 7 percent of the budget normally reserved for student materials, disabled student services and activities like field trips, Yunk said.

Although the school district has numerous accidental alarms with its security systems, Yunk said it would push those numbers back down without fines.

"It's clearly not a cavalier attitude on the part of our staff. Rather, our staff is becoming intimidated for fear of setting off alarms," Yunk said.

"We do not want anyone to hesitate in activating an alarm in fear of setting off a false alarm and incurring a fine."

The Commission was divided on a course of action. Commissioners Roger Reitz and Karen McCulloh said they supported passing the proposal with an amendment that would render federal, state and city institutions exempt from the fines.

Both cited concerns about the city taking school-district money.

"I think we'd be playing some sort of elaborate shell game, moving tax funds back and forth," McCulloh said.

Hall, on the other hand, said he only would support voting down the issue or tabling it again, since the amendment would make government exempt from laws applied to the public.

"I don't want to be like our federal legislators," Hall said.

Klimek said he opposed the fine for any party, public or private, and Commissioner Bruce Snead said he wanted to table the proposal again to craft it later.

The final vote to re-table the proposal came out 3-2, with commissioners Reitz and McCulloh opposed.

people that you would never have gotten to meet otherwise," she said.

Lansdowne said applicants are judged on their speaking ability, creativity, knowledge of the university and enthusiasm. This is a change from the criteria in the 1972 Homecoming Queen competition, which included characteristics such as personality, poise and beauty.

"This is more than a popularity contest or a one-time honor. You serve the whole year as a student representative, rather than someone who can just smile and wave," Reser said.

Ryan Laudermilk, the ambassador selections co-chair and 1996-1997 student ambassador, said his experience was rewarding for many reasons.

"There were times when I would speak at Catbacker events with only 15 minutes notice. I expanded my speaking abilities with learning how to deal with situations like those. When you meet the die-hard, purple-clad alumni, though, how could you go wrong?" he said.

The elections for the 1998-1999 K-State Ambassador begin today and run through Friday in the K-State Student Union.

This year's candidates are Angie Moxley, Kim Peschka, Philip Stein, Sara Tirrell and Jake Worcester.

Union renovation turns to ballroom, food court

■ East sidewalk, atrium finished; Union director says enhancements continue on schedule.

BY AMANDA EWING
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Renovations to the K-State Student Union are proceeding on schedule, and students soon will see major changes.

Within the past week, the east entrance sidewalk and the atrium were finished. New skylights and regular lights were installed in the atrium.

Union Director Bernard Pitts said the skylights have a temperature sensor on them that open the windows automatically when the temperature gets too hot. Windows also can be opened manually in the event the building needs to be exhausted.

Work also is near completion in the recreation room, where a corridor has been added to provide a third exit from the room.

The ballroom is the next area where work will begin. Soundproof partitions will replace the current dividers. The new partitions will allow multiple activities to occur without sound transmitting from one of the room's five sections to another.

The Konza Room also will receive major work, as the ceiling will be torn out and replaced with a drop ceiling. Pitts said this will aid in acoustics, lighting and temperature control.

Asbestos removal is ongoing as new areas are remodeled. Mike Mayo, architect for the project, said the removal is completely safe.

"We are completely blocking things off from the public and the construction workers," Mayo said. "We are meeting the requirements for removal and doing so in a manner that is least inconvenient to the users of the Union."

The renovation that might affect students most is the new food court in the Stateroom. Work in that area is scheduled to begin after Thanksgiving. The textbook section from the second floor of the bookstore will be relocated, and seating will be placed in the front third of the area for dining use. Additional seating also will be located at the south end of the concourse.

Pitts said the new style of food service will allow students to go anywhere in the Union and eat. This grab-and-go concept will help alleviate the congestion around the Stateroom.

"We are looking at using spaces in ways that they are not traditionally used," Pitts said.

Some spaces that will serve a new purpose are the art gallery and the atrium. Pitts said these two areas might be used for catering events.

To keep people informed of the progress, the Union web site is updated weekly. Fliers also are spread around the Union as a means of providing updates.

As the food court construction begins, viewing windows in the walls will allow observation of the work. The gradual renovations, though, prevent people from remaining excited about the work, Pitts said.

"The challenge is to let people rejoice and celebrate the renovations," Pitts said. "It's difficult because this will take two years, and there's no massive recognition we've remodeled."

Original plans included more changes

News Analysis

Four years after Student Senate voted to fund expansion of the K-State Student Union, less than half of the original plans envisioned for the new Union are being fulfilled.

Today's Union enhancement project appears markedly different from the expansion that student and administrative leaders promoted in spring 1994. At that time, everyone from Student Body President Ed Skoog to Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco was talking about a Student Union that not only would have needed infrastructure improvements but also a student activity center, expanded meeting space and an enlarged multilevel dining hall.

The promotion was needed to sell students on the idea of the expansion, because students were going to the polls for a referendum on the project. The referendum required 60 percent for approval; it received 59 percent. Because referendums are nonbinding, Student Senate approved the funding anyway.

What has happened since that optimistic year of 1994 when everyone seemed to be talking about a radically-altered Union? When students create a fee to fund building construction, what guarantees do they have that the university will adhere to its original

Yankees sweep past Padres for Series title

BY BEN WALKER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO — How appropriate — a sweep.

What else could it be for a New York Yankees team that is surely one of the greatest in baseball history.

Andy Pettitte and the Yankees put the finishing touch on their most dominant season by beating the San Diego Padres 3-0 Wednesday night for a record 24th World Series championship.

It was New York's second title in three years and its first sweep since 1950. The Game 4 victory gave the Yankees 125 wins — a total that ranks right up there with all the other big numbers put up in baseball this year. Their 114 regular-season victories were the most ever for a champion.

And it was a tribute to a team vastly different from all those other pinstriped winners. Without a Ruth, DiMaggio or Mantle among them — no certain Hall of Famers and no one even elected to start in the All-Star game this season — these Yankees posted a .714 winning percentage, the best in the majors since their Murderers' Row club of 1927.

Pettitte shut out San Diego into the eighth inning, while the Yankees hitters did just enough to bring down ace Kevin Brown.

Bernie Williams, perhaps playing his last game for New York, broke a scoreless tie with an RBI chopper in the sixth. In the seventh, Series MVP Scott Brosius singled home a run, and surprising rookie Ricky Ledee hit a sacrifice fly.

The Padres tried to rally in the eighth when Tony Gwynn's eighth hit of the Series finished Pettitte. A

Talks continue at Middle East peace summit

BY BARRY SCHWEID
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

QUEENSTOWN, Md. — Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu withdrew his threat to walk out of a Middle East peace summit Wednesday night as the Clinton administration scrambled to keep the talks going.

"Israel wishes to achieve an agreement and hopes there is a similar desire on the Palestinians' side," Netanyahu said in a statement after a lengthy meeting with Secretary of State Madeleine Albright on security guarantees.

President Clinton followed the developments from the White House as U.S. and Israeli officials worked on revising the security provisions that would be part of any land-for-peace swap. Presidential spokesman Joe Lockhart said Clinton's schedule Thursday was open for possibly returning to the talks.

"These are serious and difficult issues that we're still working on," Lockhart said. "What we need — and hope we'll see — are serious efforts to make progress on these issues."

A Palestinian official told The Associated Press, "the security file was closed." But Aviv Bushinsky, Netanyahu's spokesman, told AP "there is a lot of work to do."

State Department spokesman James P. Rubin characterized the security proposals as a "rolling document," indicating it was still evolving Wednesday

ROUTINE

SPIRIT

Members of Pi Kappa Alpha, Gamma Phi Beta and Beta Theta Pi celebrate Wednesday night after their bodybuilding performance in Ahearn Field House. Routines were to emphasize enthusiasm, not difficulty.

Greeks build spirit in bodybuilding preliminaries

The Results

The qualifiers in Wednesday's preliminary round of the bodybuilding competition were:

- Phi Delta Theta/Delta Delta Delta/Kappa Sigma
- Sigma Chi/Alpha Delta Pi/Delta Tau Delta
- Theta Xi/Chi Omega/Alpha Tau Omega
- Lambda Chi Alpha/Pi Beta Phi/Phi Gamma Delta
- Tau Kappa Epsilon/Alpha Xi Delta/Delta Upsilon

Loud dance music and cheers of "Fight, KSU, Fight," filled Ahearn Field House Wednesday night as 11 teams performed in the preliminary round of the Homecoming bodybuilding competition for greek organizations.

Only five teams will return at 7 tonight at Ahearn for the final round of competition.

The routines included dance moves along with stunts and cheers. The five-minute routines were judged on skills used in execution, enthusiasm, creation of spirit and the effective and creative use of human bodies.

While some had never attempted the stunts before practice in early September, others had a good idea of what would happen when they volunteered.

"I was a cheerleader all four years of high school," said Molly Casey, freshman in social work and member of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority.

Her partner, Brian Waldschmidt, senior in agricultural education and member of Delta Chi fraternity, said he was a yell leader in junior college.

"When I do things like this, I remember how much fun it was," he said.

Waldschmidt said participating in body building helped him remember the fun and the hard work involved in performing routines. The Delta Chi/Kappa Alpha Theta/Alpha Gamma Rho team practiced every Monday, Tuesday and Thursday for two hours.

"At first, the practices were a little hard," Waldschmidt said. "Once we got the routine worked out, they got easier."

The routines weren't the only things worked on during practices. Many friendships were formed in the process.

"It seems like when Homecoming is over, everything that came with it ends, too," Waldschmidt said. "Really, though, the people we did this with will always be our friends."

County services for elderly see reductions

Riley County seniors might experience a cut in services due to funding reductions from the Riley County Commission.

The commission is allocating $16,000 less next year for aging services in Riley County. The commission had to cap funding because the county is taxing at the limit.

"Because we're taxing at the lid, we can't raise more money. We have to do with what we have," County Commissioner Russ Frey said.

The money allocated by the commission is distributed by the Council on Aging. It was this agency that decided what services would take the biggest budget cut.

"We have a lot of little agencies, and they are all less than $4,000 a year. We didn't feel we should cut them, so we cut the larger ones," council chair Ernistine Gilliland said.

Gilliland said the council made the cuts as painless as possible, but there still will be people who will have to go without.

One of the agencies hit hardest by the cuts — a low-cost bus system for the elderly — will lose $12,000. Glen Nelson, the program's director, said a proposed expansion to add evening and weekend services will now be impossible.

To compensate for the lack of funding, the Council on Aging divided its emergency fund and distributed it to various groups. The funds still were not enough, and now the council has no emergency fund.

"If there's an emergency, there will just have to be an emergency," Gilliland said.

Jami Ramsey, director of the Riley County Senior Center, said the center is trying to find ways to reduce expenses and increase revenues.

"With the number of older adults increasing, these cuts will negatively impact services," Ramsey said.

The center will sponsor several fundraisers each month to raise money for the center.

Commissioners said they are already looking for solutions to the cuts.

"Hopefully, we can make it up to them," Frey said.

Software giant denies antitrust allegations

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Microsoft lawyers sought to portray the software giant's alleged offer to invest in rival Netscape as merely its executives' response to an earlier proposal from Netscape on Wednesday.

Netscape claims that during a 1995 meeting between executives from both companies, Microsoft tried to bully it into a deal to carve up the market for Internet browser software.

Netscape attorney Christine Varney said Microsoft's immensely successful business strategy was to build browser technology directly into its Windows products and to entice the nation's largest Internet companies to distribute its browser rather than Netscape's. It also attempted to prohibit computer makers from removing easy access to its browser in Windows.

Since then, Netscape's market share is down from about 90 percent to roughly 50 percent. The government contends Microsoft's behavior violated federal antitrust laws, in part because Microsoft was motivated to bundle its browser within Windows to hurt Netscape.

But at one time, Microsoft feared Netscape's influence over the browser market. In his written testimony, Netscape chief executive officer James Barksdale said Microsoft had proposed a "special relationship" between the two companies at the June 1995 meeting and threatened to cut off its technical support if it refused to accept.

"I have never been in a meeting in my 33-year-business career in which a competitor had so blatantly implied that we should either stop competing with it or the competitor would kill us," Barksdale said.

Microsoft denied it ever made such an illegal proposal. Microsoft chairman Bill Gates has called the allegation "an outrageous lie."

Fraternity suspended after freshman death

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — A fraternity that provided alcohol to a university freshman who fell out of a window and died has lost its campus charter.

The governing body of Phi Delta Theta voted unanimously to suspend permanently the charter of its University of Michigan chapter, said Robert Biggs, executive national vice president of the fraternity on Tuesday.

University officials said Courtney Cantor, 18, had attended parties Thursday at Chi Omega sorority and at Phi Delta Theta, drinking at the fraternity party. She returned early Friday to her sixth-floor residence hall room and, according to investigators, accidentally fell through a window that opened just 12 inches wide.

The daughter of Detroit News columnist and editorial writer George Cantor was found unconscious on a concrete loading deck outside her residence hall. She died of skull and spinal fractures.

An autopsy showed Courtney Cantor's blood-alcohol level was below the state's legal definition of intoxication, but Phi Delta Theta had been ordered in 1995 by its national organization to be alcohol-free, Biggs said.

"Last week, the chapter members broke their commitment to keep their house alcohol-free," Biggs told the News in a report Wednesday. "The culture of alcohol is destructive to those values and has no place in Phi Delta Theta."

Phi Delta Theta is the fourth University of Michigan fraternity in as many years to lose its charter over alcohol-related incidents, Associate Dean Frank Cianciola said.

Athlete leaves home, sues for independence

HOUSTON, Texas — Dominique Moceanu, a member of the gold medal-winning 1996 U.S. Olympic women's gymnastics team, is suing for independence from her parents, alleging they squandered her fortune and oppressed her for years.

Moceanu, 17, ran away from her parents Sunday. The next day, she filed a lawsuit in state court, asking to be declared a legal adult so her parents can't control her or her money, the Houston Chronicle reported Wednesday.

A judge signed a temporary restraining order saying that Dumitru and Camelia Moceanu must stay away from Dominique until a Nov. 11 hearing.

Dumitru Moceanu, who opened a gym last year with some of his daughter's earnings, declined comment to the newspaper. His wife could not be reached for comment.

Dominique Moceanu's lawsuit said her father has wasted money she earned since she went professional at age 10.

But Moceanu said the problem is about much more than money.

"I never had a childhood," she said.

She said her parents fueled her Olympic dream starting at age 3.

"When I went to compete when I was young, I always was in fear because I would get yelled at by my father," she said. "Instead of talking to me, they're always yelling and fighting with me."

Moceanu said her life has been far from that of the typical teen.

"It always had to be about the gym," she said. "I would think, 'Don't you guys know anything besides gymnastics? Can't we go out for ice cream? Can't you be my mom and dad instead of me being your business?'"

Dominique and her lawyer, Roy W. Moore, both declined to say how much money she has earned or how much has been lost. But Moore said a trust fund that had been set up for her is all but gone.

"I kill myself training and going to school, and what is he doing with my money?" she said. "They haven't been working since 1996. Where does their income come from? Me."

Moore said Dominique's parents, Romanian immigrants, have refused to answer their daughter's questions about the money.

HOME program helps elderly stay in their homes

Ivan Kozar/Kansas State Collegian

Wade Kell, employee at Home Owners Maintenance & Energy Program, puts together a porch at a home in the Northview area. The HOME program also uses volunteers to work on homes.

By Elizabeth Schofield
Kansas State Collegian

Fall is a busy time for the Home Owners Maintenance and Energy Program, whose main goal is to keep elderly and disabled people in their homes. Many volunteers are needed for the fall season to do tasks such as raking leaves, painting and helping people get their gardens ready for spring.

"We have these big pushes in the fall," said Karen Cook, executive director of the HOME Program. "We get a lot of volunteers at once."

Most of the work is done by volunteers, many of whom come from K-State fraternities, sororities and other organizations.

The United Way — an umbrella organization for the program — contributes 50 volunteers a weekend for four weekends to the fall cleanup.

The HOME Program, which began in 1983, promotes independent living by providing low-income, elderly and disabled home owners with affordable home maintenance.

"We're keeping people in their homes," Cook said. "They're happier here. They're healthier here."

Keeping people in their homes is more cost effective than people moving to nursing homes because they can no longer maintain their homes by themselves, Cook said.

The program uses a sliding scale based on the client's income to determine costs. The labor rate is below minimum wage.

"We don't turn anyone away for their inability to pay," Cook said.

About 10 percent of the funding for the program comes from client income. About 20 percent comes from fund-raisers and private funding. The remaining 70 percent comes from a city fund that budgets money every year for social services.

Most of the clients are women ages 69-72 who live alone and whose main source of income is social security. Cook said 87 percent of the women have been widowed for an average of five years, and 80 percent have health limitations and bills that exceed what Medicaid and Medicare cover.

"These are people who have tough choices to make," Cook said. "Do they get their gutters cleaned, or do they buy food and medicine?"

A lot of what the clients need are simple tasks like adjusting the thermostat, turning on the furnace or changing a light bulb. Sometimes HOME takes care of its clients' homes while they are in the hospital or temporarily in a nursing home, Cook said.

Rayone Ekart, 84, is a client of the HOME Program. A widow for 19 years and physically disabled, Ekart uses the program for housekeeping and general home maintenance.

"Without the HOME Program, I wouldn't have been able to live in my home," Ekart said. "It's that wonderful."

Another client of the HOME Program is 71-year-old widow Inge Gibbons. She developed a special relationship with the young man doing community service who painted her carport last year.

"We connected right away," Gibbons said. "He got to be a good friend of mine."

Gibbons has no family in the area; having the HOME program is essential to keeping her home maintained. The relationship that resulted from the program has been very important to her as well, she said.

"Now I have a grandson," Gibbons said.

Proposal would give FBI, police authority to tap cellular telephone calls

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON D.C. — Police and the FBI could find the location of any person talking on a cellular phone — as long as a court approves — under a proposal the government is expected to make today.

With about 66 million cellular-phone customers, law enforcement officials want the authority to tap cell phones to track down drug dealers, terrorists and kidnappers. But some groups worry that such a practice could violate privacy.

The Federal Communications Commission is expected to propose giving the FBI and other law-enforcement officers this and other additional wire-tapping capabilities to keep pace with technology.

The proposal is part of a larger plan to implement a 1994 law that requires companies to make digital wiretapping technology available to law enforcers. The proposal is based on a plan from the telecommunications industry.

"We think this is a positive step forward," said Stephen Colgate, the Justice Department's assistant attorney general for administration. "In many kidnapping cases, it would have been very helpful to have location information."

But James Dempsey, counsel to the Center for Democracy and Technology, a privacy group, said, "We're prepared to fight this one every step of the way."

With a court order, police already legally can listen in on cellular-phone conversations, and, in some instances, can get information on the caller's location.

But not every company has the technical ability to provide a caller's location. This proposal, if adopted, would set up a nationwide requirement for companies to follow.

The legal standard for obtaining location information is lower than the standard for a wiretap order in which police must show a judge there is probable cause of criminal activity.

Under the proposal, police would have to get a court order to obtain a cell phone's location, but only would need to show it is relevant to an investigation. Privacy groups say that means the government easily could track the movements not only of a suspect, but also of the suspect's associates, friends or relatives.

It would give police the ability to obtain the cellular phone user's location at the beginning and end of a wiretapped call, according to industry sources familiar with the plan who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The proposal would provide police with that information based on the cellular tower, or "cell" site, where a call originated and ended. That would provide information on the caller's location within several city blocks in an urban area to hundreds of square miles in a rural area.

The FBI had been seeking more exact location information.

The proposal would give police about the same level of location information they get when tapping a regular phone, said Thomas Wheeler, president of the Cellular Telecommunications Industry Association.

The FCC also is expected to tentatively conclude that companies must give police additional capabilities — beyond minimum technical standards already proposed by the industry — so their ability to conduct wiretaps won't be thwarted.

It's unclear which additional capabilities will be advanced by the FCC, the sources said.

The FBI, for instance, has asked for the ability to listen in on the conversations of all parties to a conference call, even if some are put on hold and no longer are talking to the target of the legal wiretap.

Privacy groups and the telephone industry contend that the additional capabilities sought by the FBI overstep the 1994 law and are an attempt to broaden wiretapping powers. The FBI disagrees, saying the new conditions merely preserve the ability to conduct legal wiretaps in a world of constantly changing technology.

The FCC is involved because the Justice Department, FBI and the telecommunications industry, after three years of negotiations, were unable to reach agreement on the larger plan for implementing the 1994 law.

All interested parties will get a chance to offer opinions on the proposal, which could be revised before a final plan is adopted, probably next year.

Weekend packed with fun activities

There's no shortage of things to do in Manhattan this weekend.

At times, things can get a little slow in the middle of Kansas. But students have plenty of opportunities to enjoy themselves and support the university in the coming days.

For starters, Homecoming is in full swing. Don't forget bodybuilding finals at 7 tonight in Ahearn Field House.

And Friday kicks off the Homecoming weekend with a community-wide celebration of Wildcat spirit. The 4 p.m. parade through downtown and Aggieville is for everyone, and so is Pant the Chant — a 6 p.m. pep rally in Memorial Stadium.

Things keep going Friday night with activities to get you pumped for Saturday's football game. From the pep rally, walk to Ahearn for a Wildcat volleyball game against Texas at 8 p.m.

Or cross campus for a little culture. The KSU Men's Glee Club and K-State Singers will be in concert at McCain Auditorium at 8 p.m., as well. You'll enjoy the show, and take home some tips for singing the alma mater and "Wildcat Victory" in KSU Stadium.

But Homecoming-related events aren't the only things happening in town.

Hispanic American Leadership Organization has events scheduled to celebrate this month as Hispanic Heritage Month.

Attend a lecture at 4 p.m. Friday on immigration issues in the Union Big 12 Room. Or spend Saturday night at the Ramada Inn ballroom where the group will sponsor a dance at 8 p.m.

The Provost's Lecture Series will continue Friday, but this month's lecture has special importance. President Jon Wefald will give the State of the University Address. For students and faculty, it's an important window on K-State's future and a chance to hear the president's vision for the university.

So quit your complaining. K-State groups and activities offer plenty to keep you busy in the Little Apple this weekend.

READERS WRITE

Construction necessary for university progress

Editor,

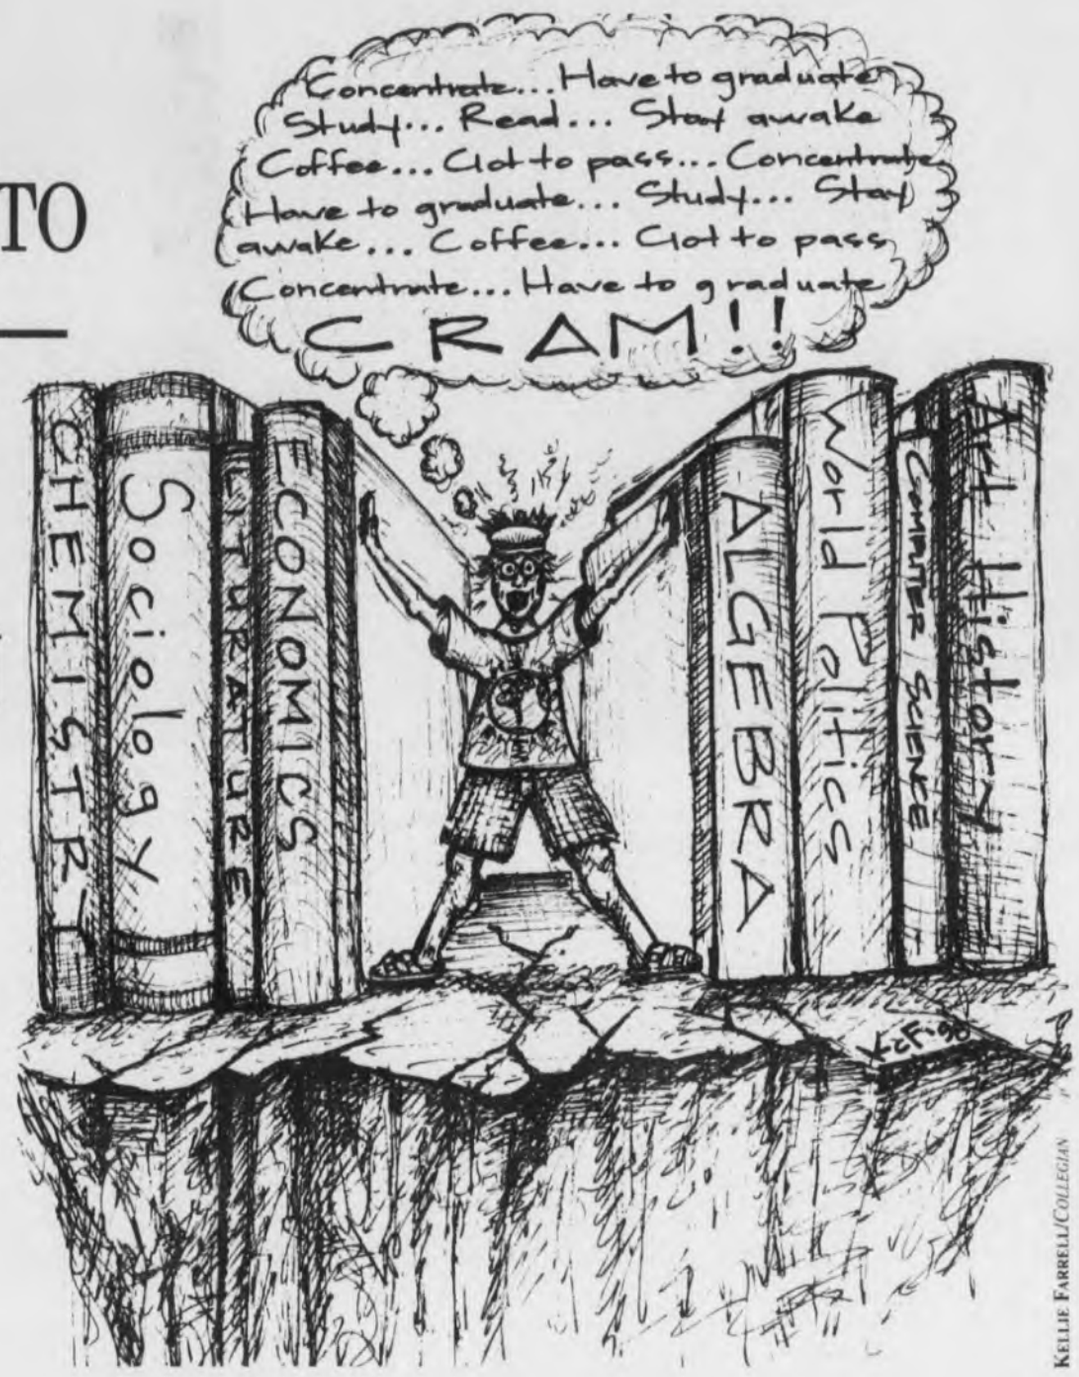
This letter is in defense of the many different K-State employees who work every day to ensure that the students of K-State have a campus.

This is aimed particularly at the article referring to the machines and construction zones across campus and also to an article condemning the watering of sidewalks on our campus that ran in the Collegian.

A few weeks ago, someone wrote an article reprimanding the Division of Facilities for not monitoring its irrigation closely enough and allowing some sprinklers to over-spray onto some of the campus sidewalks.

These people actually have enough time on their hands to write an article condemning certain actions of the Division of Facilities, not enough time to pick up a phone and call someone to ask why it's happening or to see what could be done.

The person who wrote about construction obviously had enough time to see all of the machinery on campus and all of the areas that supposedly destroyed so much vegetation, but not enough time to look around and see all of the vegetation that has been planted. This person didn't notice there was grass actually being planted between Willard and Cardwell halls. If he had been out to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, he might have noticed that most of the trees there are young trees and have been planted in the past five years.



How many students have noticed the cattle trails through campus where people were too lazy to take a five-second detour and stay on the sidewalk? And I'll bet five bucks that if you walk between Willard and Cardwell, someone already has walked across the newly planted grass.

Unfortunately, what some students don't understand is that progress is the reason the campus looks as good as it does. What this campus needs is more people willing to take a little time to do things that keep it looking good, rather than spending the time it takes to condemn the actions of employees who do just that.

WELCOME TO MIDTERMS — HERE'S YOUR ACCORDION

How to survive the trials of October

KELLIE FARRELL/COLLEGIAN

I KNOW what you're thinking. It can't possibly be the middle of the semester already. I only have one month of accumulated psychic trauma, but I'm four months behind in all of my classes, so that means October.

Various tests will rear their ugly heads in all of your classes, designed to test your midterm mettle. Generally, this means being pelted with trivia mentioned in whispered asides or shaded margins in your textbook. You'll learn more from taking these tests than you will from the classes. "Oh, wow, they expected me to know that? Huh. What were they thinking?"

KEN WELLS

I can't help you with any of your homework for class. I don't know anything, and I have at least five instructors willing to sign affidavits to that effect. Humans must have at least a little bit of chaos in their systems to offset the cold order of raw information brought by cramming, and if I know nothing else, I know chaos (exhibit A: my hair).

Do your studying, pass your tests (if you can), but be ready to embrace your more primal instincts to survive mentally. If you have trouble being less than perfectly ordered after two intense months of "write this, read this, pretend you care about this," let me offer suggestions.

Take friends to the Bookplate Cafe in Hale Library. Communicate to each other only via animal noises. Pick an animal and stick to it. Do not acknowledge humans unless they address you as "Mr. Cow," "Miss Ferret," or whatever beast you've become.

Find an open second- or third-story window and buy a lot of marshmallows. Practice catching in your mouth marshmallows dropped from a great height. Again, you'll need friends, or at least people equally as distraught as you.

Two words: Anderson lawn. Two more words: lawn darts. Two more words: unwary squirrels. Need more? How about "shish kebab'?"

Do a search-and-replace on your e-mail. Does that innocent, chaste friend of yours never use profanity? Replace every comma in their messages with the f-word. Read aloud to everyone in the public lab of your choice. They like it when you share.

Pretend you're an NFL referee. Carry a yellow flag in your back pocket and throw it when someone annoys you. Call penalties, blow whistles. "Illegal use of a possessive pronoun, number 55 on the defense, ten yard penalty, still first down." Mark off the penalized distance. This is more fun in cramped quarters and on precarious ledges.

Learn to throw a boomerang. Practice in the K-State Student Union at lunch. See how many people you can hit with one throw.

Buy a lobster, and raise it as a pet. Take over the bathtub if you must. Name it, and take it out for walks. The lobster does not necessarily have to be alive, but it does help.

Trick-or-treat. Express surprise and/or disgust that you picked the wrong night. Insist that it IS Oct. 31. Show them your handwritten calendar. Invent a new day of the week ("Cowsday") if necessary.

Introduce the concept of "Showtunes in the Library." Hold an impromptu demonstration. Serenade students as they study. Be prepared to run.

Reenact your favorite movies using picturesque campus locations as backdrops. Shout "Stella!" to the top floor of Cardwell Hall. Ride your bicycle to the inner core of Seaton Hall, preparing to fire your proton torpedoes and destroy the Death Star (use the Force as necessary). Reenact "Gone With the Wind" using the steps in front of Fairchild Hall as Tara's towering staircase. Proclaim yourself "king of the world" while balancing on the front of an appropriated (read: stolen) Cushman, puttering across campus at the speed of a raging glacier. Be careful when reenacting "Braveheart," though, as someone might think you're playing a pick-up game of rugby.

Attend the Lou Douglas Lecture Series. Claim to be Lou Douglas. Vocally disagree with anything the speakers say, especially on topics in which they are well educated. Repeat for Landon Lectures or graduate dissertations on the "refunkagroovatilization of bimethyl carbonates in prolapsyl meringue" or another suitable flavor of the day.

Send excuse notes for missing class to instructors whose classes you are not in. Concentrate on an entire department, like perhaps geography. It deserves the attention.

Above all, remember, sanity alone only can get you so far. Embrace your inner lunatic. Rationality got you here; silliness will set you free.

Hate crimes should be punished in equal manner

SAM SACKETT

Two national tragedies came to light last week. The first was the heinous murder of Matthew Shepard by two nefarious thugs. The second was the political propaganda displayed by liberals all across this nation in the name of compassion. This campus was not immune.

Last week we heard on television and read in our newspapers calls for Congress to pass hate-crime legislation specifically for attacks against people because of sexual preference. These proposed laws specifically would give special rights to gays, lesbians and bisexuals who have been the victims of hate crimes.

There were some on this campus who joined the hypocritical balderdash. They, like the rest of their liberal adherents, want special rights and protection given to gays. If they tell you they just want equal rights, don't believe the lie. They already have equal rights.

Are violent crimes, including those spurred by hate, not covered by current law? The two men who allegedly were involved in Matthew Shepard's murder are in the process of being brought to justice, if proven guilty. We don't need more laws covering what is covered already.

Crimes committed because of hate toward a person based on religion, race, sex or anything else are wrong. They should be dealt with equally. Special treatment should not be given to victims because they were hated for their sexual preference. Murder by its primary definition is committed because of hate and malice, and these crimes should be treated equally and with swift justice.

What if a white mother is murdered because she was white? Her murderers should not be given less severe punishment because the hate was for racial reasons rather than sexual preference. How would you explain this to her children otherwise?

Children: "Why did Matthew Shepard's murderers get punished more severely than our mom's killer?"

Prosecutor: "Kids, the reason is because your mother was not a lesbian. If she were a lesbian, then the punishment would have been more severe."

How many gay, lesbian and bisexual people would have called for federal hate-crime legislation if the two murderers had been homosexuals? If Shepard were a heterosexual targeted by two gay men, the public outcry would not have been even remotely comparable to what it was last week.

Shame on those who used Shepard as the brunt of selfish political and special interests. Those who got riled up about his death called for national hate-crime laws. What did those same people do last year when three schoolchildren were gunned down during a morning prayer meeting at Heath High School in Paducah, Ky.?

They talk of being fair. They talk of compassion. Where is the compassion and fairness in giving the Shepard incident preferential treatment over several schoolchildren murders?

I am all about compassion — don't believe otherwise — but the hypocrisy of liberalism angers me. The Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society had a candlelight vigil for Shepard on Monday night. Those who attended did not remember him because he was a good person. They remembered him because he was gay.

If they really were interested in remembering good people, I am sure they could find thousands who are murdered every day all around this world because of hate. These people had no ties to Shepard, yet they had a candlelight vigil for him. Do they do this for other people they have never heard about? They didn't know Shepard. They were not remembering a life. They never knew him to be able to remember him.

How do you celebrate a life you know nothing about? They heard he was gay and was a nice person. So, being liberal-minded, they decide to have a vigil. Then everyone says, "How compassionate. Look how much they care."

Based on their actions, they don't care. These people want to advance their own agenda. Be on your guard against everyone who yells, "Toleration!" It is not as innocent as it seems.

For the record, candlelight vigils are OK to have when the intentions are genuine. I like compassion. What I don't like is hypocrisy. I don't hate gays, lesbians or bisexuals. What I do hate is the gay, lesbian and bisexual lifestyle.

Chess club gets 2nd chance, tries to regroup

■ Club has only 5 members but is focusing on recruitment.

The local chess club, which had to dissolve last year after its meeting place closed, was reestablished this year through the Student Governing Association as K-State-Manhattan Chess Club.

Mory Mort, Manhattan resident and 20-year chess player, said the club had 25 to 30 members when it dissolved. This year the club has five members.

"We are now trying to regroup," Mort said.

Local residents, K-State students and faculty come together at 6 p.m. Wednesdays in Union 205 to sharpen their chess skills.

"My family plays," said Sharon Entz, sophomore in milling science. "My brother, father and grandfather always beat me. I went away to college and worked to improve my game."

The chess club offers the opportunity to learn the two types of chess, Raymond Paul, club president, said.

"We teach students how to play casual chess and competitive chess," Paul said.

Though the club isn't attending tournaments, it plans to in the future.

"When we get more mature and stronger, we plan to hold some tournaments," Paul said.

Tournaments are rated on playing ability, Mort said. The rating scale starts at 600 and goes up.

"The world champion chess player is rated at 2,700, but it can go higher," Mort said. "There are computers that can beat him."

Tournaments are not only a way for players to compare themselves to the competition, but a way to be more involved.

"When you go to a tournament, there can be three or four games a day, over a number of days," Mort said.

Paul said he encouraged students who are interested in learning more about the game of chess. He said beginners should attend meetings, but not expect overnight success.

"A good chess player will be transformed over a period of time," Paul said.

K-State Community Service Program offers activities in Kansas, abroad

■ Program began in 1987, focuses on diversity.

By Jeff Sutton
Kansas State Collegian

Gratification from teaching children from as far away as Jordan about American culture or working with community-development issues as close as Alta Vista, Kan., can prove to be life-changing experiences for K-State students.

The K-State Community Service Program, which began in 1987, offers citizenship activities to students ranging from international experiences to statewide opportunities to local tutoring programs.

"Our goal is that K-State students are involved in community service," said Carol Peak, CSP director. "We're a pretty diverse program trying to meet many needs."

The program includes international teams, Kansas summer teams, CSP tutoring and America Reads. Though the same application is used for all four, citizenship is an underlying theme that project coordinators look for in each applicant.

"Citizenship is a 24-hour-a-day job," said Liz Schepmann, Kansas summer teams student coordinator. "They are having a practicum in citizenship."

The Kansas summer teams are usually about six groups of interdisciplinary students working with community projects around the state. Past projects have included Main Street revitalization and youth recreation programs.

"We ask small communities to identify projects they think may be important to their future," Peak said. "We respond to what the community thinks is important."

Students working on Kansas projects receive a stipend of $2,000 for two months of work and a $500 scholarship upon completion of the summer.

If students are more interested in working outside of Kansas and the United States, CSP offers international summer teams. Positions are unpaid, and the teams will work at up to 12 sites in developing countries for eight to 10 weeks during the summer.

Michelle Crago, student coordinator for the international teams, worked with more than 100 different children in Jordan during summer 1997.

"It's being a good role model and showing them what Americans are really like," Crago said. "What I taught them was that Americans are not stuck on being a movie star or rock star. We're from small towns, too."

Students on both the international and Kansas teams will be required to take a three-hour preparation course in the spring and a reflection course in the fall.

The preparation course is designed to acquaint students with expectations for the upcoming summer and practical experience about living away from home.

"We're trying to help students boost their ability to communicate," Peak said.

Likewise, the reflection course gives students the opportunity to look back on the summer.

"We know from our experiences in the past that this is the most important part of the program," Peak said. "We ask questions like, 'What difference did I make in the community?' and 'What difference did the community make for me?'"

Recommended prerequisites for the Kansas and international experiences include being a sophomore, junior or senior with a grade point average of 3.0 or above.

The application for each program is due Oct. 3. Interviews will begin in November. Two CSP reference forms must accompany the completed application. Application extensions might be granted.

If global or state-wide service doesn't appeal students, they also can get involved in CSP at sites in Manhattan through America Reads and CSP tutoring.

America Reads is a national program in which students work as tutors, working exclusively on reading with children from kindergarten through grade 12. CSP tutors work with children on a variety of subjects at least three hours each week. They are given a $100 scholarship at the end of their semester of work.

Tutor applications are accepted year-round, although currently all the positions are filled.

Student Coordinator Jill Stafford, junior in agricultural economics, said this is her third year with the program.

"I loved it because you knew you had made a difference," Stafford said. "To see that look of satisfaction on their face was gratifying — to think that such a small doing could make a world of difference in the life of someone else."

ONE CRAZY CAT

From head to toe, on and off the field, safety Jarrod Cooper is turning heads

BY JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Just for fun, take a walk through campus one day and see how many people you can label with just one glance. Some are easy to dub. There are the moody ones, the ones who have smug written all over their face and even the occasional few who seem to lack a vital organ between the ears.

Then there's Jarrod Cooper.

The 6-foot-1-inch sophomore strong safety provides so many different shades of personality, a quick label wouldn't even begin to show the depth of Cooper's outrageous character. In fact, Webster's Dictionary hasn't even developed a term to describe the uncanny demeanor of the bleach-blond Cooper.

Armed with a prankster's spirit and a devil-may-care mentality, Cooper stands out like a wolf in sheep's clothing among Bill Snyder's no-nonsense football program.

Don't let his appearance fool you; Cooper came to play. A first-team All-Big 12 Conference pick by The Kansas City Star in 1997, the Pearland, Texas, native has continued to excel this season. Third on the team with 42 tackles, Cooper played a vital role in the Cats' 52-20 victory over Oklahoma State on Saturday, leading the team with 10 tackles, a sack and his first career interception.

While his play on the field has been stellar, the character behind the play is far more intriguing than any NCAA statistic.

CHARACTER POINT 1: THE HAIR

"It was in the summertime, and my hair was getting long," Cooper said. "I was going to cut it, then I thought, 'Well, I'll just stick it up here and get it out of the way.' Now, it just goes with the flow."

What can best be described as an ode to Pebbles of "The Flintstones," Cooper's dyed-blond hair typically stands in a ponytail that meets at the top of his dome.

"His hair is all over the place," said freshman defensive back Milton Proctor.

CHARACTER POINT 2: THE FACE PAINT

"Sometimes I do it, sometimes I don't, whenever I feel like it," he said. "I go by what I feel."

Influenced by everything from tribal art to "the images in my head," Cooper has donned face paint from time to time in the K-State weight room. Taking the phrase "putting your game-face on" to another level, Cooper's weight-room antics provide entertainment for any teammates busy at work.

"He's crazy. He'll always joke around in the weight room," Proctor said. "He'll put paint on his face or just start yelling for no reason."

CHARACTER POINT 3: THE PETS

"I've got some mean fish," Cooper said, referring to his tank of piranhas. "Actually, three of them died because somebody poured something in our fish bowl. I don't know what it was, but it definitely came out of a bottle."

The carnivorous fish provide an aquatic parallel to Cooper's aggressive behavior on the field.

COOPER

One of the hardest hitters of the defense, Cooper's eyes grew wide when he described his love for kickoffs.

"I like the sky-right kicks, when he (Martin Gramatica) puts them up in the air," Cooper said. "I'm just waiting for somebody to be looking at the ball and bam, that's all she wrote for that person."

With such a predatory instinct, it's not surprising Cooper takes to his ferocious fish so well. However, he's not the first Cat to take a liking to piranhas.

Former defensive star Mike Ekeler, a 1994 graduate, also nurtured a pet piranha during his days in Manhattan.

Ekeler, who once broke a wooden advertisement attached to KSU Stadium with his head before a game, was one of the most intense players to ever wear purple.

"I met him one time up here," Cooper said. "He's a pretty nice guy."

The intensity that Cooper brings to the field is not without its roots. During his playing days in Texas, he struggled through four years of continuous losing, an experience Cooper said elevated his drive to win.

"In high school, I won one game, maybe two, in 40 games, so I'm dying to win," he said. "I mean, whatever it takes.

"I'm not dirty, though. I'll help you up after I hit you. I'll do what it takes to win, though."

Cooper's intensity is easy to identify, since it's on display almost every Saturday afternoon, but the side that few know about Cooper is his spirituality.

Although one might think his pregame preparation includes breaking locker room equipment or blasting hardcore music, Cooper said he routinely gives thanks in a quiet prayer.

"I pray a lot, because I never imagined myself being here," he said. "I mean, I came from someplace that was terrible. I pray and thank God a lot, because I was in something terrible. It's just a miracle that I'm here."

With that revelation, yet another component to this enigma is known. From jester to predator to humbled soul, Cooper continues to buck any attempt to stick a label on his personality. While the public searches for the proper term, Cooper will continue to perform on the field and live a life grateful for the opportunity he's been given.

"I give a lot of thanks when I think about what I could be doing," Cooper said. "That's how fortunate I am. When I think about all my friends at home, I realize I have the opportunity of a lifetime."

K-State's Jarrod Cooper looks toward the end zone after receiving a lateral from teammate Gerald Neasman during this year's game against Northern Illinois at KSU Stadium. Cooper ran the football in from 15 yards out after Neasman intercepted a pass.

K-State ambassador candidate proves unworthy opponent for predicting college football

Soapbox of the week: If K-State beats Iowa State on Saturday to advance to 7-0 for the first time since 1910, DON'T TEAR DOWN THE GOAL POSTS! It would look pretty stupid against Iowa State. Speaking of the 1910 7-0 start, the Aggies (K-State didn't become the Wildcats until 1915) knocked off traditional powerhouses Haskell Institute, KSTC Emporia, Arkansas, Drury, Missouri School of Mines, Creighton and William Jewell — K-State coach Bill Snyder's alma mater.

The Cats and the Aggies have never started 8-0.

Soapbox of the week II: I didn't know about that Sony PlayStation tournament going on Tuesday night in the K-State Student Union. If I did, I would have cleaned up. I respect Brandon Knowles' abilities, but I'm confident I would give anybody a run for their money. I'll play with a running team, a passing team, a team that can't move the ball, a team with no defense — I don't care. I execute my plays. I get to the holes ... I'm money.

I was money when Sega Genesis was the bomb, and I'm money now on the PlayStation. I'm graduating in December and getting married in May. Maybe this is my way of finding out it's time to move on from the video games.

No. She knows what she's getting into.

Anyway, here's what ol' Uncle Sammy has to say this week:

I DID IT! I DID IT! Those of you who read my column on a weekly basis know I pick football games against the spread every week. I go head-to-head with a guest picker, and my goal is always to do better. I've made some pretty retarded mistakes in past football columns, so I'm trying to prove I'm worthy of writing about the sport.

I had been undefeated, but the first time I went up against a woman, she beat me. I felt like an idiot, and rightly so. But I've evened the score. Last week, I stood in against another female, and I DID IT! I've evened the score. Not that beating a woman who thinks K-State wide receiver Aaron Lockett is going to win the Thorpe Award, given annually to the top defensive back in the nation, is worth writing home about.

But it sure is better than going 0-2 and offering decent proof that women are smarter than men.

This week, I'm back to taking on one of my own kind. I always play to win, but I wouldn't mind losing this week.

I'm going up against a 1982 K-State graduate, Maj. Larry Hinkin of the United States Air Force. Hinkin currently is stationed in Seoul, and I give him all my respect. It's difficult to spend considerable time overseas — my mom spent a year in Korea in the Air Force, and I know how difficult it was for her to be away.

I'm going to try to win with my picks, but I wouldn't mind if he beats me — I'm over here writing whatever I want to in the newspaper, and he's over there defending that right.

If you would like to give your respect to Hinkin, send him an e-mail at fan59@fan.com. Do it!

So good luck, Hinkin. Here are the games we're picking this week.

1. Iowa State +34.5 at K-State. On the PlayStation, it's a clear mismatch. "On the game, they're really slow, and I just go deep on them every time. Hopefully, this Saturday I can do the same thing," wide receiver Darnell McDonald said. If McDonald can whoop the Cyclones on PlayStation, I'm comfortable. My pick: K-State to cover. Guest pick: K-State to cover.

2. Indiana +14.5 at Michigan. I know I'm going out on a limb here, but I'm calling for a straight-up Hoosier win. I'm becoming a bigger Antwaan Randle El fan each week. However, I only need Indiana to keep it within 14. My pick: Indiana to cover. Guest pick: Michigan to cover.

3. Missouri +19.5 at Nebraska. I only feel the way I do because the game is in Lincoln, Neb. Hinkin says, "If it wasn't at Nebraska I would pick Mizzou to win." My pick: Nebraska to cover. Guest pick: Missouri to cover.

4. Colorado -8 at Kansas. Hinkin married a KU grad, so he's stuck picking the birds. Ah, married life. This is what I have to look forward to? Thank goodness mine isn't graduating from KU. My pick: Colorado to cover. Guest pick: Kansas to cover.

5. Texas Tech +9 at Texas A&M. I don't see either team winning this game by more than about four points. Both these teams play everybody tight. My pick: Texas Tech to cover. Guest pick: Texas A&M to cover.

6. Baylor +16 at Texas. I'm saying Ricky Williams runs for 248 yards in Mack Brown's season-long attempt to pad Williams' stats for the Heisman run. Hinkin guesses 227. My pick: Texas to cover. Guest pick: Texas to cover.

7. Wisconsin -6 at Iowa. In case anybody has forgotten, Iowa lost to Iowa State. My pick: Wisconsin to cover. Guest pick: Iowa to cover.

8. Armed Forces Edition: Army +22.5 at Notre Dame. In honor of Hinkin and the Air Force, I'll pick against Army. My pick: Notre Dame to cover. Guest pick: Notre Dame to cover.

9. Armed Forces Edition Part II: Air Force -11.5 at Tulsa. In honor of Hinkin and the Air Force, I'll pick against Tulsa. My pick: Air Force to cover. Guest pick: Air Force to cover.

10. UCLA -14.5 at California. I spell the name of the road school with an extra letter at the beginning. It's one of the earlier letters in the alphabet. Try to guess which one. My pick: California to cover. Guest pick: UCLA to cover.

11. Oklahoma +8.5 at Oklahoma State. OU joke of the week (It's old but can be applied to the school in Larry): What's the best use for an OU diploma? Handicapped parking. Send me your jokes for next week. My pick: Oklahoma State to cover. Guest pick: Oklahoma State to cover.

That's it. Think one of us is wrong? Have a good tofu recipe? Want to know my dad's middle name? Drop me an e-mail.

K-State glass blower to unveil newest artwork at ceremony on Friday morning

BY JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Visitors to the K-State Student Union have been admiring them for years — three models in protective cases sit just outside the second-floor entrance to the K-State Union Bookstore. These precious works of art must be guarded carefully; made entirely of glass, they could be damaged by clumsy handlers.

Mitsugi Ohno, the senior master glass-blower emeritus who created these and other well-known models, is scheduled to unveil his latest work in a ceremony at 11:30 a.m. Friday in King 209.

His new work of art is a 1/61 scale model of the HMS Victory, the British flagship Lord Nelson commanded at the Battle of Trafalgar. In this battle, Great Britain defeated the combined naval forces of Spain and France.

"The Victory won what was probably the most decisive naval battle ever fought," said Peter Sherwood, Department of Chemistry chairman. "It changed the world's sea power for the next two centuries."

Ohno's version of the Victory is 2 1/2 feet tall and almost 3 1/2 feet long. Like most of Ohno's models, it took about 500 hours of work to complete.

Ohno came to K-State in 1961 to teach in the Department of Physics, after being made the chief glass technician at the University of Tokyo.

Upon becoming an American citizen, Ohno created a scale model of the U.S. Capitol as a gift to his new country. The model is on display at the Smithsonian Institution. Ohno's work also is displayed in the White House, the Imperial Palace of Japan and in various areas around the K-State campus.

"Mr. Ohno has chosen ships because of their historical significance," Sherwood said.

Other Ohno creations include models of Cardwell Hall (where he taught his first classes), Anderson Hall and the USS Nimitz, all of which are on display in the Union.

The artist retired from K-State's faculty in June 1996 but still keeps busy with glass blowing in his spare time, which is apparent by his latest work.

The Victory will be displayed in the Chemistry/Biochemistry building with other examples of Ohno's work. The ceremony will include a presentation to link the histories of the models.

MORE INFO?
Ohno's newest work will be unveiled at 11:30 a.m. Friday, in 209 King Hall. Ohno's collection then will be on display in the Chemistry/Biochemistry building.

CLIMBING ROCKS

UPC sponsors rock-climbing trip to University of Nebraska

BY JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Union Program Council has a suggestion for students climbing the walls due to midterm boredom.

The UPC Outdoor Adventure Committee has scheduled a Nov. 7 indoor rock-climbing road trip to the University of Nebraska at Lincoln.

A recreational center at the university features a 32-by-56-foot wall for scaling.

UPC has reserved the wall from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Participants can climb as many times as they wish.

"This trip is not necessarily for advanced climbers," Nate Kettle, UPC committee chair, said. "There are routes for novice climbers, too."

The trip costs $21 per person. This price includes transportation to and from the K-State Student Union, wall reservation, and harness and shoe rental.

For those concerned with safety, Nebraska provides belay instruction to deter injuries.

Sign-ups for the event begin Monday in the UPC office on the third floor of the Union. Space for the trip is limited to 12 students.

Kettle said bringing too many participants on a trip like this would limit the time people could spend on the wall.

Future Outdoor Adventure events include a canoeing trip on the Kansas River, scheduled for Nov. 21.

Court closes marijuana club

■ Club sold drug to AIDS, cancer patients for pain.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. — A public health emergency was declared after a federal court closed the city's medical marijuana club, leaving 2,200 patients with no legal source for the drug they say quells the pain of AIDS and cancer.

Tuesday night's 5-4 City Council vote, believed to be the first of its kind, allowed officials to develop other means of selling marijuana to people who can no longer get the drug at the Oakland Cannabis Buyers' Cooperative.

"We're definitely making history," said Jeff Jones, executive director of the club. "It's another time the city has come out and allowed patients to keep their rights."

San Francisco and Berkeley have previously declared medical emergencies to allow distribution of intravenous needles to drug users to curb the spread of HIV. But no other city has passed such a measure to allow use of marijuana for medical reasons.

"It's going to be devastating," Dave Fratello said of the closure. His group, Americans for Medical Rights, sponsored Proposition 215, the 1996 ballot measure that legalized marijuana use for medical reasons in California.

"Many people don't know where to go, and other people are going to get ripped off," Fratello said earlier this week.

Proposition 215 allows patients and caregivers to possess and grow marijuana without prosecution under California law, as long as a doctor has recommended the drug to relieve pain from AIDS or cancer treatment, glaucoma or other conditions.

The Justice Department and state Attorney General Dan Lungren have repeatedly gone to court to block the law, and Mayor Elihu Harris, who cast the deciding vote, acknowledged that their declaration is just a "symbolic gesture."

It won't mean the club will reopen, and the council seemed wary about the city getting into the distribution business itself. But some council members were determined to send a message.

"We still have an AIDS epidemic, and medical marijuana has been proven to help relieve some of the suffering," said councilman Nate Miley, who sponsored the declaration. "Why is the federal government interfering with the will of the people?"

One possible alternative would be to set aside city property for growing and harvesting marijuana by patients with doctor's recommendations, Jones said. It would be less likely that the city would hire people to distribute the drug.

When U.S. District Judge Charles Breyer issued an injunction in May barring six Northern California clubs from distributing marijuana, Oakland city officials designated marijuana club officials as city agents, invoking a federal law that protects state and local officers from liability while enforcing drug laws.

But Breyer said the club was violating the law, not enforcing it.

The club closed down on Monday after the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals rejected a request to stay open while attorneys appeal a federal judge's ruling that the club was in contempt of court for continuing to distribute pot.

Club customers said their needs are urgent.

Jaax led team in researching Ebola

■ Researcher comes to K-State as university research compliance officer

BY NANCY GRATHWOHL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Welcome to Jerry Jaax's "Project X."

Many might remember the movie starring Matthew Broderick, but Jaax's real-life version takes a different turn on monkey research.

Jaax led a team of specialists who managed the facility of Ebola-infected monkeys imported into the United States in 1990.

Jaax recently joined the office of the vice provost for research as the university research compliance officer and institutional veterinarian, said John Murray, professor and interim associate vice provost for research.

"He will oversee the implementation of federal regulations relating to animal care and use in research, the protection of human subjects in research, and the broad issues of occupational health and safety for the K-State campus," Murray said.

Jaax also will work with the College of Veterinary Medicine on campuswide veterinary services, Murray said.

"He will add a level of expertise and skill in protecting animals in research that we have never had before," Murray said.

Jaax spent the past 20 years at Fort Detrick, Md., and Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., where he worked on medical defense against chemical and biological warfare agents.

During his assignment there, the Ebola outbreak occurred.

The monkeys imported into the United States to a quarantined station in Reston, Va., had unexpected mortalities, Jaax said. A new strain of Ebola, called Ebola Reston, caused these deaths. Ebola Reston is not a human pathogen, Jaax said.

"At that time, the only Ebola viruses known had a 60 to 95 percent mortality in humans, and it had never been seen in monkeys before," he said.

The book "The Hot Zone" by Richard Preston told about the outbreak, and the movie "Outbreak" also was based loosely on the Ebola incident.

Jaax graduated from the College of Veterinary Medicine at K-State in 1972. He joined the army that same year, where he achieved the rank of colonel.

He did his post-graduate residency in laboratory animal medicine at Fort Detrick, which is the army's Infectious Disease Research Institute.

Jaax also worked as a consultant to the surgeon general on laboratory animal medicine, and he served as a faculty member at the Uniform Services University of Health Services before coming to K-State.

Currently, Jaax said his work at K-State is dominated by laboratory animal issues.

"I am working on putting together a laboratory animal care and use program for the university," Jaax said.

This would include putting a World Wide Web site on the university's server to assist various investigators performing research, Jaax said.

Jaax said the regulations are very specific and extensive for performing research on animals and certainly with human subjects.

"This is an undertaking that can't be done in a haphazard or cavalier manner," Jaax said.

Certain requirements must be met for research. The principle driver for how animals are used here on campus is the Institutional Animal Care and Use Committee.

"It is our responsibility to make sure that only research done in the proper way and humane method is performed at K-State," Jaax said.

Jaax said he felt lucky to find a position at K-State, where his family wanted to resettle.

"There aren't very many jobs for what I do. There were 35 to 40 positions in Maryland and two in the whole state here," Jaax said. "But, we have lived all over the world, and we are glad to be back here."

Clinton signs $520 billion spending package

Senate approves 4,000-page bill with 65-29 vote

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON D.C. — With little fanfare, President Clinton signed a $520 billion spending package Wednesday that by early estimates came in about $30 billion more than envisioned in last year's budget-balancing deal. Lawmakers shipped the measure to the White House as the 105th Congress was fading into history.

In its last important vote of 1998, the Senate approved the 4,000-page bill 65-29, then sorted through a final stack of minor items and left town for the year. The House also was poised to leave — but still planned to pursue its inquiry into Clinton's possible impeachment after the Nov. 3 elections.

Clinton said of the big bill, "There's a lot of little things tucked away there that I wish weren't in that budget." But he added that "on balance, it honors our values and strengthens our country and looks to the future."

With the entire House and one-third of the Senate facing the voters in two weeks, lawmakers were eager to leave town. Even so, Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., had to defend the spending bill that he and other GOP leaders negotiated last week with White House officials. Conservatives protested that it was bloated and others said they had no idea what was in it.

"I'm deeply disappointed by the inability of our own Republican leadership to keep its promise to working Americans" to cut taxes and spending, Sen. Rod Grams, R-Minn., said on the Senate floor.

Noting that No. 2 Senate GOP leader Don Nickles of Oklahoma also had opposed the bill, Lott said a reporter, "I guess he thought there was too much money in there. I felt that way. But there's a lot of good in there, too."

A day after the House overwhelmingly approved the measure, Republicans voted for it 33-20, with supporters citing its increased spending for defense and anti-drug efforts and its blocking of Clinton initiatives such as national student testing.

Democrats favored it 32-9, happy over wins for schools and environmental programs. Yet as the full text of the legislation was finally widely distributed, another reason for its resounding support became clearer: hundreds and hundreds of projects for lawmakers' districts.

Among them, Rep. Ralph Regula, R-Ohio, won $300,000 for the National First Ladies Library in Canton, Ohio, which Regula's wife, Mary, helped found in 1995. There was $70 million for a rail project in Hudson and Bergen counties, N.J., home state of Senate Appropriations Committee member Frank Lautenberg, a Democrat.

There was $1.4 million to restore the one-time Plains, Ga., home of former President Carter, which is now a national historic site. And outgoing Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., received at least two honors. A federal rice research center in Stuttgart, Ark, was named after him, and a National Institutes of Health vaccine research laboratory in Bethesda, Md., was named after him and his wife, Betty.

Referring to the relatively few congressional leaders and White House officials who negotiated the deal, Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., who voted against the package, said, "There's so much here, even they don't know what's in it."

The bill covers nearly one-third of the federal budget for fiscal 1999, which began Oct. 1. Using various accounting maneuvers, lawmakers were able to cram even more spending into it than last year's balanced budget agreement was designed to accommodate.

First, they and Clinton designated $21 billion as emergency spending, which means it will be paid for out of expected federal surpluses. This includes aid for farmers, heightened security at U.S. embassies, keeping U.S. peacekeepers in Bosnia and other programs.

The lawmakers also avoided budget caps for this year by designating at least $8.4 billion of mostly education spending for fiscal 2000, according to preliminary Congressional Budget Office figures provided by Senate budget aides.

While lawmakers have long used this practice, the $8.4 billion is more than twice the $4 billion that budget writers last year designated for 1999.

An additional $2.8 billion was paid for by savings claimed from transactions involving the District of Columbia pension funds and broadcast spectrum sales.

Together, that adds up to more than $30 billion above the amount the budget deal set for this year, and critics are complaining.

"With the deficit gone and replaced by the surplus, the discipline has begun to break down," said Robert Reischauer, former director of the Congressional Budget Office.

night. Asked specifically if the document was being revised, Rubin said he wasn't "ruling out nuances and details."

The Palestinians, meanwhile, said they would reject any new Israeli demand. Ahmed Tibi, an adviser to Yasser Arafat, said internal politics in Israel were blocking a land-for-peace accord.

A senior U.S. official had suggested earlier that Netanyahu's threat to leave did not reflect Israel's real stance in the talks. "I wouldn't think their private posture is quite as stark as their public posture," he said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

As Israel pushed back its threatened deadline three times, its ambassador to the United Nations, Dore Gold, said his country still wanted to the give the talks a chance.

"No one is closing doors," Gold said, adding that Israel needed "a concrete security plan in order to make this process safe for Israelis, safe ultimately for Palestinians and safe for the Middle East."

With the atmosphere souring on the seventh day of the talks, Israel and the Palestinians exchanged accusations on which side was responsible for the slow progress in concluding a land-for-peace accord.

And yet, Arafat telephoned 49th birthday congratulations to Netanyahu and urged him to stay on and complete the agreement.

Tibi, his adviser, said the Palestinians already had accepted the U.S. recommendations. "We are waiting for a yes from the Israelis," he said.

Rubin said a U.S. document, combining understandings already reached by the two sides and U.S. suggestions to bridge remaining differences, would be given to Israel and the Palestinians later in the day.

"We are at a key moment in the history of the Middle East peace process," he said.

Almost immediately after Rubin spoke to reporters, Aviv Bushinsky, spokesman for Netanyahu, said the Israeli delegation had a timetable for departure Wednesday night.

"We are packing our bags," he told reporters as both sides went public despite a call for restraint by the administration.

Rubin said the intensity was only increasing and that it was not clear whether Netanyahu and Arafat were ready to make the choices needed for an accord.

He said the document being prepared by the administration was designed to advance the security of both people and reflected the criticality of the moment.

As to whether the Israelis would quit the talks, Rubin said, "We're prepared to facilitate anyone's departure. We're not holding anyone against their will."

He said, however, that he did not know the Israeli plans.

"It's not just a threat," a senior Israeli official told AP. "We are considering it, and we've made all the preparations."

Israel accused the Palestinians of failing to respond to their security needs and refusal to nullify anti-Israel provisions in the Palestine Liberation Organization's covenant.

The Palestinians, in turn, accused the Israelis of "political blackmail" and of introducing new, last-minute demands.

"At this point, there is no deal," Lockhart said.

"This is tough going."

Earlier Wednesday, informal talks went on without Clinton, who has spent 57 hours at the talks, trying to bridge the gap between Netanyahu and Arafat.

single by Ken Caminiti off Mariano Rivera loaded the bases with two outs, but Jim Leyritz, a postseason hero in the past for the Yankees and San Diego, flied out to Williams.

The sweep was the first since Cincinnati upset Oakland in 1990 and was the Yankees' seventh. Also, New York won its eighth straight Series game while the Padres lost their seventh in a row.

For a team that led the AL in pitching and scoring, it was a complete performance that produced its seventh straight win in this postseason.

Plus, perhaps the Yankees had something else going for them — inspiration from slugger Darryl Strawberry, out because of colon cancer. All the Yankees had his No. 39 embroidered on their caps.

Pettitte won just six days after his father underwent heart bypass surgery, allowing five hits in 7-1/3 innings. It was reminiscent of his performance in Game 5 of the 1996 World Series, when he beat Atlanta 1-0.

Brown, who could not hold a three-run lead in the seventh inning of Game 1, took the loss.

Rivera closed out his spectacular postseason, getting the last four outs for his third save of the Series. Including the playoff wins over Texas and Cleveland, he pitched 13-1/3 scoreless innings and recorded six saves.

Pettitte and Brown dueled evenly into the sixth, when the Yankees moved ahead by the slightest of margins.

Derek Jeter singled with one out and slumping Paul O'Neill doubled. Williams, the AL batting champion, hit a chopper in front of the mound that Brown barehanded.

But Jeter quickly broke for home and Brown saw he had no play, getting the out at first. Jeter took no chances, sliding home and toppling Padres catcher Carlos Hernandez.

Williams finished 1-for-16 in the Series. He's eligible for free agency, and there's been talk that he might leave for Arizona, Colorado or another club and a salary of more than $10 million a season.

In the eighth, Jeter led off with a walk, and O'Neill reached on an infield single. Both moved up on Williams' groundout and Brown intentionally walked Tino Martinez to load the bases.

That brought up Brosius, acquired in the winter after hitting just .203 last year for Oakland.

The hero of Game 4 with two homers, he hit an RBI single. Brosius went 8-for-17 in the series with six RBIs.

Ledee followed with a sacrifice fly. He finished 6-for-10 in three starts.

UNION

plans for the building?

Expansion to enhancement

"If you take a picture four years ago and take a crumbling building with no reserves and a continuing deficit, it's difficult for anyone to project out to a student body of 20,000 exactly what's going to happen," Bosco said. "Add in inflation, an ever-changing bond market and a student body that changes by at least 30 percent every year."

Bosco, who is overseeing much of the project, said the wish list for the Union was in excess of $40 million. Without any money up front to hire an architect to do preliminary planning, it was virtually impossible to predict how much of that wish list would become reality in the final project. He said such hoped-for projects as the student activity center were at the bottom of the list — leftovers after all the money had been spent on infrastructure.

The Collegian followed the story almost weekly in spring 1994. In every case, student promoters sold the project on such features as 20,000 square feet of new tri-level dining space, while also discussing major needs of the Union in the areas of fire protection, asbestos removal and Americans With Disabilities Act requirements.

David Frese, who was student body vice president in spring 1994 and now works in Kansas City, Mo., said everything student leaders knew about the project was theoretical, in that whatever they proposed to students was only an estimation of what the project could accomplish. However, he said students were aware the proposal would be realized only as much as the budget would allow.

"It was probably the most honest project the administration has tried to get students to pass," Frese said. "There were no shenanigans."

Student fees and guarantees

The Union is a special case at K-State, for it was built and is maintained with student money. The enhancement project was facilitated by students and has been overseen by several student-dominated committees since its inception.

At the advanced committee stage, however, there might not be the money to include items such as the student activity center, because the fee already is locked in place.

Tom Schellhardt, associate vice president of administration and finance, said the bond document includes a program statement that specifies what the project will accomplish. This statement was used to develop architectural drawings for the project.

"We don't deviate from that, and students are always a part of that process," Schellhardt said.

However, the language of the bond document is kept somewhat general. It doesn't include specifics about the building, though a building program statement did exist at the time and was made available to students.

"I don't know that we want to be too specific," Schellhardt said. "If the bids come in lower, then we have the add-alternates. I think there's enough control here from the student involvement and participation and the committee overseeing the project."

Students could have hinged the fate of the Union project entirely on specific details, such as the activity center, had Student Senate included such language in its bill authorizing the funding.

K-State Controller Keith Ratzloff said the program statement for the project must be followed as part of the process the bond issue goes through with the Board of Regents and the State Building Advisory Committee.

However, Ratzloff said, Senate could have written anything it wanted into the fee-authorization legislation.

"There were no provisos in the language of the legislation," he said.

The Union expansion privilege fee is $25 a semester, $2 of which goes to Union programming, and it lasts for 26 years. The fee money is used to retire the bonds issued to pay for construction costs.

In 1994, the project had a budget of $9.1 million. The current budget is closer to $11 million. The administration has promised $500,000 toward the Union Plaza project and a $1 million renovation of the space between the Union and Seaton Hall. The administration also is giving $30,000 a year toward Union Program Council to bring its total to $100,000.

"It's student money, so the students would be within their rights to indicate certain items they wanted," Ratzloff said.
